Preface

The Annual Report on Exchange Arrangements and Exchange Restrictions has been published by the IMF since 1950. It draws on information available to the IMF from a number of sources, including that provided in the course of official staff visits to member countries, and has been prepared in close consultation with national authorities.

This project was coordinated in the Monetary and Capital Markets Department under the guidance of Annamaria Kokenyne and Tjoervi Olafsson by a staff team led by Salim M. Darbar and comprising Pamela Cardozo, Ricardo Cervantes, Pornpinun Chantapacdepong, Michael Gottschalk, Jerzy Jiang, Lamia Khandker, Kieran Murphy, Isabella Perez, Svetlana Popova, Felipe Rojas, Ashvik Viswanathan, and Hanqing Ye and Viktoriya Zotova (both external consultants). It draws on the specialized contributions of that department (for specific countries), with assistance from staff members of the IMF's five area departments, together with staff of other departments. Wala'a El Barasse, Ouafia Akil, and Rumit Pancholi from the Communications Department managed the editing and production of this report.

Overview

This is the 74th issue of the Annual Report on Exchange Arrangements and Exchange Restrictions (AREAER), which provides a yearly description of the foreign exchange arrangements, exchange and trade systems, and capital controls of all IMF member countries.[1] The AREAER reports on restrictions in effect under Article XIV, Section 2, of the IMF's Articles of Agreement in accordance with Section 3 of Article XIV, which mandates annual reporting on such restrictions.[2] It also provides information relating to paragraph 25 of the 2012 Integrated Surveillance Decision, which restates the obligation of each member country under the IMF's Articles of Agreement to notify the IMF of the exchange arrangement it intends to apply and any changes in that arrangement.[3]

The AREAER provides a description of global exchange and trade systems. It covers restrictions on current international payments and transfers and multiple currency practices (MCPs) subject to the IMF's jurisdiction in accordance with Article VIII, Sections 2(a) and 3, in addition to those maintained under Article XIV of the IMF's Articles of Agreement.[4] The report also provides information on the operation of foreign exchange markets, controls on international trade, controls on capital transactions, and measures implemented in the financial sector, including prudential measures. In addition, the AREAER reports on exchange measures imposed by member countries solely for national and/or international security reasons, including those reported to the IMF in accordance with relevant decisions by the IMF Executive Board.[5]

The AREAER provides information, relating to paragraph 25 of the 2012 Integrated Surveillance Decision, on exchange rate arrangements of member countries: the de jure arrangements as described by the countries and the de facto arrangements, which are classified into 10 categories (Table 1). This classification is based on the information available on members' de facto arrangements, as analyzed by IMF staff, which may differ from countries' officially announced (de jure) arrangements. The methodology and the characteristics of the categories are described in the Compilation Guide included in this report.

Table 1. Classification of Exchange Rate Arrangements

Type	Categories
Hard pegs	Exchange arrangement with no separate legal tender	Currency board arrangement
Soft pegs	Conventional pegged arrangement	Pegged exchange rate within horizontal bands	Stabilized arrangement	Crawling peg	Crawl-like arrangement
Floating regimes (market-determined rates)	Floating	Free floating
Residual	Other managed arrangement

Note: This methodology became effective February 2, 2009, and reflects an attempt to provide greater consistency and objectivity of exchange rate classifications across countries and to improve the transparency of the IMF's bilateral and multilateral surveillance in this area. For further details, see IMF Working Paper 09/211 https://www.imf.org/en/Publications/WP/Issues/2016/12/31/Revised-System-for-the-Classification-of-Exchange-Rate-Arrangements-23311.

[1] In addition to the 190 IMF member countries, the report includes information on Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR (both in the People's Republic of China) as well as Aruba, Curaçao, and Sint Maarten (all in the Kingdom of the Netherlands).

[2] The IMF's Articles of Agreement are available at www.imf.org/external/pubs/ft/aa/index.htm.

[3] See www.imf.org/external/np/sec/pn/2012/pn1289.htm.

[4] The information on exchange restrictions and MCPs consists of verbatim quotes from each country's most recent published IMF staff report as of December 31, 2022. In cases in which the information is drawn from IMF staff reports that have not been made public, the quotes have been included with the express consent of the member country. In the absence of such consent, the relevant information is reported as "not publicly available." Any changes to these restrictions and MCPs implemented after the relevant IMF report has been issued will be reflected in the subsequent issue of the AREAER that covers the year during which the IMF staff report with information on such changes is issued.

[5] The information on exchange measures imposed for security reasons is based solely on information provided by country authorities.

Several tools help navigate and interpret the findings of this report. A single table compares the characteristics of the exchange and trade systems of all IMF member countries: Summary Features of Exchange Arrangements and Regulatory Frameworks for Current and Capital Transactions in Member Countries. The Country Table Matrix lists the categories of data reported for each country, and the Compilation Guide includes definitions and explanations used to report the data.

Starting with this 2023 publication, the AREAER template was updated with the addition of a new section, numbered "XIII" and titled "Digital currencies and crypto assets" (see Country Table Matrix). This section is further divided into five main categories: Circulation of central bank digital currency (CBDC)—retail and/or wholesale; Controls on the use of domestic CBDC—retail and/or wholesale; Controls on CBDC launched by another jurisdiction; Crypto assets; and Controls on crypto exchanges and trading platforms.

The AREAER is available online. As of January 1, 2020, access to AREAER Online is freely available to all; previously a subscription was required. The AREAER Online database includes the overview and detailed information for each of its 190 member countries and separately for a few members' territories, which increased by one in the previous issue with the inclusion of information from Macao SAR.[6] In addition, AREAER Online contains data published in previous issues of the AREAER and is searchable by year, country, and category of measure; it also allows cross-country comparisons for time series.[7,8]

In general, previous vintages of the AREAER published in a particular year included a description of exchange and trade systems as of the end of December of the previous year, with some reporting data through part of the publication year and de facto exchange rate arrangements as of the end of April of the publication year. The 2023 AREAER, similarly to the previous year's publication, includes a description of exchange and trade systems at least as of June 30, 2023, for all members: about 18 percent of members' reporting periods end during the third quarter of 2023, and about the same number of members' reporting periods end during the fourth quarter of 2023.[9] Nevertheless, in keeping with past AREAERs, information on member countries' de facto exchange rate arrangements in this report are as of April 30, 2023, while information on exchange restrictions and MCPs is indicated as reported in the latest IMF staff reports as of December 31, 2022.

Overall Developments

After a sharp recovery in 2021, global growth moderated in 2022 and world GDP grew at 3.5 percent compared with 6.5 percent in 2021 (April 2024 World Economic Outlook). In part this reflected the combined shocks of the Russia's invasion of Ukraine in early 2022 and the worldwide cost-of-living crisis caused by persistent and broad-based inflationary pressures. In response, there was a globally synchronized monetary policy tightening, and by the end of 2022, median headline inflation peaked at 9.4 percent (April 2024 World Economic Outlook). Despite rising interest rates, economic activity remained resilient and favorable demand and supply developments supported major economies. The tightening of global financial conditions led to capital outflows from many emerging and frontier market economies. There was a marked increase in the number of actions taken to regulate capital transactions, along with an increase in tightening measures relative to 2021.

In 2023, global growth was estimated to have declined marginally compared with 2022 to 3.2 percent. Economies continued to be resilient, supported in part by government and private spending in many economies, along with disposable income gains supporting consumption and households drawing down their pandemic-era savings

[6] Aruba, Curaçao, and Sint Maarten (all in the Kingdom of the Netherlands; information for Curaçao and Sint Maarten is reported together as they have a common central bank) and Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR (both in the People's Republic of China). Hence, detailed information is available for 194 jurisdictions.

[8] The number of yearly changes reported by each country can be compared directly with those of the previous six reporting periods but not with those of years before that because of the update to the format of the yearly changes table, which was introduced with the 2017 publication (see the 2017 AREAER).

[9] The numbers for 2023 are hence not complete and should be interpreted with caution. The date of the latest reported development is indicated as the position date for each country in the country chapters in the AREAER Online database. Data for Syria are as of the end of 2017 and Afghanistan and Venezuela as of the end of June 2021. Updates to the Myanmar country chapter was based solely on available public information.

(January 2024 World Economic Outlook Update). At the same time, growth was facilitated by supply-side expansion with broad-based labor force participation and resolution of pandemic-era supply chain problems. Inflation continued to fall during 2023 amid restrictive monetary policies implemented by major central banks. Partial data for 2023 indicate a reversal in net capital inflows to emerging market and developing economies (EMDEs) relative to 2022. The trend in changes to regulations governing capital transactions remained broadly similar to 2022.

The 2023 AREAER documents the following major trends and significant developments:

- Between May 2022 and April 2023, the reclassification of de facto exchange rate arrangements saw a notable increase accompanied by a significant rise in "other managed" arrangements indicating a response to heightened uncertainty in the economic environment. In line with past trends, the largest number of reclassifications were within the soft peg categories.
- There were five modifications to official monetary anchors, marking a notable contrast to the previous report which observed no changes. This reflected in part movement to inflation targeting and also away from it, for instance, to an anchor to the US dollar.
- In 2022, foreign exchange interventions were primarily driven by geopolitical tensions, particularly the Russian invasion of Ukraine, which disrupted global markets and increased currency volatility. Additionally, high inflation, coupled with rising interest rates to combat it, and heightened financial market uncertainty prompted central banks to stabilize their currencies to maintain economic stability.
- Changes to the foreign exchange market structures were mixed in 2022 with both easing and tightening actions being implemented, and the overall number of such actions increased significantly compared to 2021. In part, this reflected both global factors (lingering effects of the pandemic, tightening financial conditions in response to the global rise in inflation, and the impact of Russia's invasion of Ukraine), along with country specific factors. The trend continued into 2023.
- The number of IMF member countries accepting the obligations of Article VIII, Sections 2(a), 3, and 4, and those members who make use of the transitional arrangement under Article XIV remained unchanged at the end of 2022: 174 and 16, respectively. The number of countries maintaining restrictive exchange measures increased from 45 in 2021 to 46 at the end of 2022. Overall, in 2022 the number of restrictive exchange measures increased by 16 and the composition changed: the number of such measures increased by 29 in Article VIII countries and decreased by 13 in Article XIV countries.
- Liberalizing actions dominated the current account in 2022, amid an increased number of total measures compared to the previous year. Partial data for 2023 suggest that the liberalizing trend appeared to have continued into 2023 for both import and import payments and export and export proceeds, but at a slower pace. In contrast, payments and proceeds for invisible transactions and current transfers saw a significant increase in tightening actions in 2022, and this trend appears to be continuing for payments based on available data for 2023. Tightening measures in account transactions also increased considerably in 2022, while liberalization regulations declined, mainly driven by an increase in the number of countries implementing restrictive measures.
- The liberalization of capital transactions reversed in 2022 relative to 2021 with the total number of actions increasing mainly on account of a steep rise in tightening (both outflow and inflow) controls. This is largely attributed to tightening actions introduced in response to Russia's invasion of Ukraine. The majority of actions on capital transactions were taken by EMDEs, while advance economies continued tightening transactions related to foreign direct investments (FDI). Partial data for 2023 suggest a continuation of this trend.
- In 2022, an almost equal number of easing and tightening measures were taken within the financial sector, similar to 2021. The incidence of prudential measures in 2022 was significant, with tightening measures peaking within the 2019–23 timeframe, and the trend continuing into 2023. The high number of tightening prudential measures in 2022 and 2023 was mainly driven by increases in reserves requirements, as countries reversed reductions taken during the pandemic and entered a tightening cycle to fight inflationary pressures. In contrast, the overall number of capital controls measures were the lowest in 2022 since 2019—most were directed at banks and other credit institutions and were mostly easing favoring outflows.
- Three countries reported that a domestic CBDC was launched in their jurisdiction. A majority of countries reported that they had no controls or had no regulations in place to control the use of CBDCs launched by another jurisdiction. About half of the countries reported that they have no controls or no regulations restricting the use of various types of tokens and stablecoins.

Developments in Exchange Arrangements

This section documents major changes and trends in the following related areas: exchange rate arrangements, intervention, monetary anchors, and the operation and structure of foreign exchange markets. It also reports on significant developments with respect to exchange taxes, exchange rate structures, and national currencies. There are five tables in this section. Table 2 highlights changes in the reclassification of the de facto exchange rate arrangements between May 1, 2022, and April 30, 2023. Table 3 breaks down countries' de facto exchange rate arrangements for 2015–23. Table 4 summarizes the detailed descriptions in the country chapters by reporting each IMF member country's monetary policy framework as indicated by country officials and the classification of their de facto exchange rate arrangements. Table 5 outlines IMF member countries' monetary policy frameworks as reported by country authorities and exchange rate anchors for 2015–23, and Table 6 reports the foreign exchange market structure among the membership for 2019–23.

Exchange Rate Arrangements[10]

Throughout 2022, numerous emerging market currencies experienced depreciation against the US dollar. This trend was primarily attributed to the robust performance of the US economy, escalating global inflation rates, global economic challenges including geopolitical tensions, and shifts in monetary policy in major economies. The US dollar's notable strength against a wide array of currencies was majorly propelled by the Federal Reserve's monetary policy adjustments aimed at combating the rising inflation within the United States. The series of rate hikes and the Federal Reserve's hawkish stance on monetary policy intensified the allure of the dollar, attracting investors in pursuit of superior yields from US assets.

The geopolitical turbulence stirred by the Russian invasion of Ukraine in February 2022 exerted a significant impact on the global economic landscape and foreign exchange markets. This event escalated geopolitical uncertainties, bolstering the demand for safe haven currencies. Additionally, the sanctions imposed on Russia by Western nations, coupled with the resultant disturbances in energy and commodity markets, amplified volatility across currency markets.

The euro observed a depreciation against the US dollar. This was influenced by the European Central Bank's comparatively more cautious stance on monetary policy tightening relative to the Federal Reserve, growing concerns over energy security in Europe in the wake of the Ukraine crisis, and the euro area's tempered economic growth.

During the first quarter of 2023, the behavior of the US dollar was volatile amid changes in expectations of the magnitude of monetary tightening by the Federal Reserve and the publication of mixed economic data in the United States that generated greater risk aversion.

Between May 2022 and April 2023, there was a significant increase in the reclassification of de facto exchange rate arrangements, doubling the number observed in the previous AREAER to 31 countries (Table 2).[11] A notable trend was the shift toward more flexible exchange rate arrangements, with 55 percent (17 out of 31 countries) moving to a more flexible arrangement, a small increase from 53 percent in the prior period. Conversely, 45 percent (14 out of 31 countries) transitioned to more managed arrangements, slightly down from 47 percent previously.

During this reporting period, there was a notable rise in the classification of countries to "other managed" arrangements by 22 percentage points, from 7 percent previously (Figure 1), while the share of floating arrangements decreased by 17 percentage points from 33 percent. This shift toward the residual category "other managed" arrangement typically occurs during heightened uncertainty in the economic environment.

Furthermore, while over half of the reclassifications in past reports were to soft peg arrangements,[12] there was a 5 percentage point decrease in the share of countries moving to soft pegs, from 60 percent in the previous AREAER.

[10] This section summarizes developments between May 1, 2022, and April 30, 2023. However, some reclassifications in the exchange rate arrangement reflect policy changes that occurred during the first quarter of 2022, which were not included in the previous AREAER (with a cutoff date of April 30, 2022) because the exchange rate classification system requires at least six months of observations for a reclassification.

[11] Countries whose exchange rates were reclassified more than once and in the process back to the same classification as in April 2023 are excluded.

[12] For a list of soft peg classifications, see Table 1.

[1] This column refers to the arrangements as reported in the 2022 AREAER, except when a reclassification took place during January 1–April 30, 2022, in which case it refers to the arrangement preceding such a reclassification.

[2] The exchange rate arrangement was reclassified retroactively, overriding a previously published classification for the entire reporting period or part of the period.

[3] Cells in the column "Previous Arrangement" are blank if there was a subsequent reclassification during the reporting period.

Although the number of reclassifications per year may seem high, over the past decade, 59 percent of members have maintained the same de facto arrangement. Meanwhile, 28 percent changed their arrangements one to three times, and only 13 percent of members had more than four changes during this period (Figure 2, panel 1).

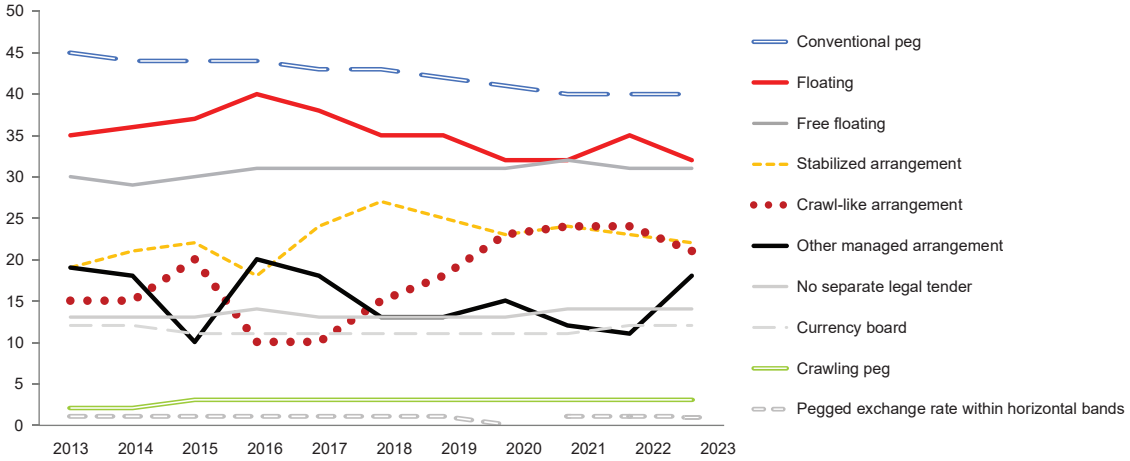
(Number of countries as of April 30)



Sources: IMF, AREAER database; and IMF staff calculations.

The changes in individual categories are as follows:

- Soft pegs—Although the total number of countries with soft pegs did not change much (a net decrease of 4, to 87), compared with the previous reporting period, the majority of reclassifications took place in this group, with most of the changes in crawl-like and stabilized arrangements. Countries adopting stabilized and crawl-like arrangements often adjust their exchange rates in response to external events, including differences in inflation across countries, capital flow pressures, and new trends in world trade. As a result, they are often reclassified to other categories within the soft peg group. Soft pegs continue to make up the single largest type of exchange rate arrangement, accounting for 44.8 percent of members (Table 3).
  - Crawl-like arrangements—The number of countries with crawl-like arrangements remained at 24, following a steady increase since 2017 (Figure 2, panel 2; Table 4). However, this category registered most of the changes in this reporting period (23). Twelve countries exited this classification: six moved to "other managed" (Bangladesh, China, Dominican Republic,[13] Ghana, Lao P.D.R., Solomon Islands), three to stabilized (Guinea, Romania,[14] Vietnam), and two to floating (Mauritius, Switzerland). Nine countries were added: six were reclassified from stabilized (Cambodia, Egypt, Kyrgyz Republic,[15] Mongolia, Nigeria, Singapore[16]) and three from floating (Jamaica, Türkiye, Zambia). Two countries were reclassified twice during this reporting period, reverting to a crawl-like arrangement (Sri Lanka,[17] Uzbekistan[18]).
  - Stabilized arrangements—The number of countries with stabilized arrangements decreased by 1, to 22. Within soft pegs, following crawl-like arrangements, this category registered the second largest number of changes (16). Seven countries joined the group: three from crawl-like arrangement (Guinea, Romania, Vietnam), two from floating (Armenia, Ukraine), one from "crawling peg" (Honduras), and one from "other managed" (Myanmar). Eight countries left this group: six to crawl-like (Cambodia, Egypt, Kyrgyz Republic, Mongolia, Nigeria, Singapore), one to "free floating" (Croatia), and one to "other managed" (Islamic Republic of Iran). One country was reclassified twice during this reporting period, reverting to stabilized arrangement (Tajikistan[19]).

[13] Dominican Republic was reclassified retroactively to "other managed" in October 2021. Retroactive changes are reflected as of January 1, 2022, corresponding to the first day of the period covered in this year's AREAER.

[14] Romania was reclassified retroactively to "stabilized" in September 2021. Retroactive changes are reflected as of January 1, 2022, corresponding to the first day of the period covered in this year's AREAER.

[15] Kyrgyz Republic was reclassified twice—to "other managed" in February 2022 and to "crawl-like" in October 2022.

[16] Singapore was reclassified retroactively to "crawl-like" in December 2021. Retroactive changes are reflected as of January 1, 2022, corresponding to the first day of the period covered in this year's AREAER.

[17] Sri Lanka was reclassified twice—to "other managed" in March 2022 and to "crawl-like" in May 2022.

[18] Uzbekistan was reclassified twice—to "other managed" in March 2022 and to "crawl-like" in June 2022.

[19] Tajikistan was reclassified twice—to "other managed" in March 2022 and to "stabilized" in July 2022.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

- Conventional pegs—The number of countries in this category remains at 40 with no changes during this AREAER period. The conventional peg arrangement holds the largest share among soft pegs, with 46 percent, although it has been decreasing gradually since April 2016 from its peak of 58 percent.
- Crawling pegs—The number of countries in this group remained at three with only two changes. One country left this group (Honduras), and one adopted this classification in line with the change in its de jure arrangement in March 2022 (Argentina).
- Pegged exchange rates within horizontal bands—There was no change in this category that contains one country (Morocco). Three other countries have de jure pegged exchange rates within horizontal bands, but two of them have a de facto "other managed" exchange rate (Syria, Tonga) and one has a de facto stabilized arrangement (Maldives).

- Other managed arrangements—The number of countries in this residual category increased on a net basis by 7, to 18. There were 11 changes from May 2022 through April 2023. Nine countries were added: six from crawl-like (Bangladesh, China, Dominican Republic, Ghana, Lao P.D.R., Solomon Islands), two from floating (Angola, Pakistan[20]), and one from stabilized (Islamic Republic of Iran). In contrast, two countries exited this category: one was reclassified to floating (Liberia) and the second one to stabilized (Myanmar[21]).
- Floating arrangement—The number of countries classified as floating decreased by 3 to 32, with 12 changes in the group's composition. Seven abandoned this category: three to crawl-like (Jamaica, Türkiye, Zambia), two to stabilized (Armenia, Ukraine), and two to "other managed" (Angola, Pakistan). Four countries were added: two from crawl-like (Mauritius, Switzerland), one from "free floating" (Chile), and one from "other managed" (Liberia). One country was reclassified twice during this reporting period, reverting to floating arrangement (Paraguay[22]).
- Free floating—The number of countries with free-floating arrangements remained at 31 with two changes during this AREAER period: one country was reclassified to floating (Chile), and Croatia (previously currency board) was reclassified as free floating when it joined the European Economic and Monetary Union on January 1, 2023.
- Hard pegs (no separate legal tender and currency boards)—The number of countries in this category remained at 26. Changes in this category are rare, because countries with such arrangements tend to maintain their exchange rate policies unless their economies undergo large structural changes that result in an exit.

Monetary Anchors[23]

The exchange rate remained the anchor for monetary policy for fewer than half of the member countries—41.8 percent (Table 5). This period saw five changes in official monetary anchors, a notable contrast to the previous report which observed no changes. Specifically, two countries shifted away from an "inflation-targeting framework," with one adopting a "monetary aggregate target" and another aligning with the US dollar. Additionally, two countries transitioned from "other monetary framework" to "inflation-targeting framework," and one country moved from an anchor to the euro to "other monetary framework" (see Table 4).

An officially announced fixed exchange rate policy—either as a hard peg or soft peg—implies the use of the exchange rate as the unique monetary anchor. Seventy-nine member countries report having such an arrangement with seven exceptions. Although the official (de jure) exchange rate regime of these seven countries is a soft peg, five countries reported the use of a mix of monetary policy tools, including exchange rate anchor under an "other monetary framework" (Argentina, Solomon Islands, Tonga, Vanuatu, Venezuela), and two countries reported targeting monetary aggregates (Bolivia, Samoa). Among the 61 countries with de facto floating exchange rate arrangements— floating or free floating—the monetary anchor varies among monetary aggregates (6), inflation targeting (31), and "other" (24, including the 20 European Economic and Monetary Union countries). In the group of countries targeting monetary aggregates (26), there are 15 countries implementing soft pegs, 5 countries having other managed, and 6 countries floating arrangements. Countries with either stabilized or crawl-like arrangements (43) report reliance on a variety of monetary frameworks, including monetary aggregates and inflation-targeting frameworks. Other managed arrangements (18) are split among exchange rate anchors (3), monetary aggregate targets (5), inflation-targeting framework (2), and other monetary policy frameworks (8).

- The share of IMF members with the exchange rate as the main policy target remained unchanged at 41.8 percent. Countries with hard pegs and soft pegs make up 96.3 percent of this group. Three currency unions—the Central African Economic and Monetary Community, Eastern Caribbean Currency Union, and West African Economic and Monetary Union—have exchange rate anchors for their respective common currency.
- The US dollar maintained its position as the dominant exchange rate anchor, increasing slightly to 19.6 percent. After decreasing steadily from 26.5 percent since 2010, the number of countries using this anchor stabilized for two years from 2018 to 2019, decreased again until 2021, and then slightly increased during this reporting period by 0.5 percent, to 19.6 percent. One country (Ukraine) reported a change from having an inflation-targeting framework in the previous AREAER. In February 2022, the National Bank of Ukraine (NBU) established a fixed exchange rate between the US dollar and the Ukrainian hryvnia as a strategic measure to maintain macroeconomic stability. This decision aimed to mitigate panic and forestall a potential uncontrolled inflationary spiral. Amid the heightened uncertainty triggered by the Russian invasion, the fixed exchange rate served as a crucial stabilizing force for economic expectations and played a pivotal role in the NBU's efforts to achieve its monetary policy objectives.

[23] Monetary anchors are defined as the main intermediate target the authorities pursue to achieve their policy goal (which, overwhelmingly, is price stability). The inventory of monetary anchors is based mainly on members' declarations in the context of the yearly AREAER update or Article IV Consultations and is not necessarily consistent with the de facto exchange rate arrangement.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

- The euro is the second dominant exchange rate anchor, at 12.9 percent. This represents a slight decline of 0.5 percentage point compared to the figures reported in the previous AREAER. The primary reason for this reduction is the shift in Croatia's monetary policy framework (to "other monetary framework") consequent to its entry into the European Economic and Monetary Union on January 1, 2023. Countries with currencies anchored to the euro generally have historical ties with European countries—for example, the Communauté Financière d'Afrique franc area countries—are part of the European Union; or have strong trade relations with western Europe, including central and eastern European countries—for example, Bulgaria (currency board with the euro), North Macedonia (de jure floating arrangement), and Montenegro (uses the euro as its legal tender)
- The share or composition of countries using an exchange rate anchored to another currency remained at 5.2 percent. Ten countries maintain an exchange rate anchored to another single currency. Three of these countries (Kiribati, Nauru, Tuvalu) use the Australian dollar as their legal tender, one (Brunei Darussalam) has a currency board arrangement with the Singapore dollar, and one (Macao SAR) has a currency board to the Hong Kong dollar. The remaining five have conventional pegged arrangements: three (Eswatini, Lesotho, Namibia) are pegged to the South African rand and two (Bhutan, Nepal) to the Indian rupee. Half the countries in this group are landlocked, bordering either partially or exclusively the country whose currency they use as their exchange rate anchor. The anchor currency is typically freely usable in the country and is often legal tender.
- Eight countries reported having a monetary policy framework with the exchange rate anchored to a currency composite. Two countries track special drawing rights as their sole currency basket (Libya, Syria) and one the special drawing right and the rand (Botswana). Vietnam anchors to a broader reference basket and additionally specified that the dong may fluctuate within a daily transaction band of ±5 percent against the US dollar. Singapore is anchored to its nominal effective exchange rate. Morocco tracks a euro and US dollar basket. The Fiji dollar is anchored to a basket of five currencies (US dollar, Australian dollar, New Zealand dollar, Japanese yen, euro). Kuwait does not disclose the composition of its reference currency basket.

Most IMF member countries, representing the overwhelming share of global output, are split among monetary aggregate targeting, inflation targeting, and "other" (which includes monetary policy not committed to a specific target).

- The number of countries targeting a monetary aggregate increased by 1, to 25, as Seychelles reported a change from having an inflation-targeting framework in the previous reporting period. This category does not include any country with a free-floating exchange rate arrangement. In fact, monetary aggregates are often the choice of economies with less developed financial markets and managed exchange rates. The objective of the arrangement is to influence consumer prices and, eventually, asset prices through the control of monetary aggregates. Reserve money is often used as the operational target to control credit growth through the credit multiplier.
- The count of countries committed to inflation targeting consistently held at 45, despite adjustments within the group. Specifically, Mauritius and Mongolia transitioned from an "other monetary framework" to adopt inflation targeting. Concurrently, this group experienced the departure of two countries: Seychelles shifted its strategy to focus on targeting monetary aggregates, while Ukraine decided to anchor its currency to the US dollar. Of the 45 countries in this group, 33 have either a de facto floating or free-floating exchange rate arrangement.[24] The central bank is responsible for setting the inflation target for 20 of the 45 countries in this category, and in 20 countries the central bank and the government jointly set the targets. About half of the countries (26) have a target with a tolerance band, with only two countries targeting core inflation. Most of the countries (43) report having inflation- targeting regime commitments to transparency and accountability.
- The "other monetary policy framework" category decreased by 1, to 42. There were three changes reported in this group: two countries (Mauritius, Mongolia) moved to "inflation-targeting framework" and one country (Croatia) was added when it joined the European Economic and Monetary Union on January 1, 2023. A few countries in this category are in transition to an inflation-targeting framework (Egypt, Mongolia, Mozambique, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Tunisia). This category includes many of the largest economies, such as the euro area and the United States. It is also used as a residual classification for countries for which no relevant information is available and for those with alternative monetary policy frameworks not categorized in this report.

Foreign Exchange Interventions

IMF staff regularly assess whether the frequency of foreign exchange intervention is consistent with the de facto free-floating arrangements or whether classification as a soft peg is appropriate (see the Compilation Guide). These assessments draw on information that is publicly available, information reported to the IMF by member countries, market reports, and other sources, including information obtained during official staff visits to member countries.

Intervention Purpose

In general, the purpose of central bank interventions in the foreign exchange market is multifaceted, aiming to stabilize the currency, manage liquidity, control inflation, support the banking sector, and ultimately foster a stable economic environment conducive to growth and development.

- Stabilize the exchange rate: Central banks intervene to manage excessive volatility in the exchange rate. By buying or selling their currency, they aim to prevent sharp fluctuations that could harm the economy. For example, the National Bank of Georgia conducts occasional multiple price foreign exchange auctions allowing participants to bid within a corridor around the official exchange rate.
- Accumulate foreign exchange reserves: Some central banks, like the Bank of Albania, use preannounced auctions to accumulate foreign exchange reserves. This can provide a buffer to support the national currency in times of economic distress or when facing severe balance-of-payments pressures, as well as in safeguarding credibility of the existing policy regime.
- Enhance supply of foreign exchange: Central banks, such as the Central Bank of Nigeria and the Bank of Ghana, intervene, as needed, in the market including through auctions to enhance the supply of foreign currency, aiming to ensure the availability of foreign exchange for certain imports and other transactions.
- Control inflation and competitiveness: By influencing the exchange rate, central banks can indirectly control inflation and competitiveness. A stronger national currency can reduce the cost of imported goods and divert domestic demand to a greater extent toward imports, thus lowering inflationary pressures. Conversely, a weaker currency can increase inflation pressures, while making imports more expensive and boost export competitiveness. For example, the Central Bank of Argentina's policy to gradually adjust the crawl rate to the pace of inflation aimed at maintaining external competitiveness.
- Support the banking sector: Interventions can also be aimed at supporting the banking sector. For example, the National Bank of Serbia performed weekly swap auction sales to foster the growth of the interbank swap market and enhance the management of euro and dinar liquidity among banks. These operations involved the buying and selling of foreign exchange for dinars, with the transactions set to mature in three months and two weeks, respectively.
- Manage expectations: By intervening in the foreign exchange market, central banks can also aim to manage market expectations regarding the future movement of exchange rates. This may help stabilize the market and reduce speculative trading that could destabilize the currency.
- Promote economic growth: By ensuring stability in the foreign exchange market and providing necessary liquidity, central banks aim to create a conducive environment for economic growth. Stable exchange rates can encourage foreign investment and trade, which are vital components of economic development.

Intervention Techniques

IMF members typically conduct various intervention techniques in managing their respective foreign exchange market.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

- Foreign currency auctions: Many central banks use auctions to manage the supply of foreign currency in the market. These can be either single-price or multiple-price auctions, where banks submit bids to buy or sell foreign currency. Examples include the Bank of Jamaica using the Foreign Exchange Intervention Trading Tool mechanism for foreign exchange auctions and the Central Bank of Nigeria intervening in the market through auctions to enhance supply. Belarus operates an electronic trading system based on the continuous two-way auction principle to facilitate the trading of foreign currencies each business day, where the National Bank of the Republic of Belarus may intervene as necessary.
- Spot and swap auctions: Some central banks intervene directly in the foreign exchange market to buy or sell currencies. This can be to directly influence the exchange rate or to meet specific objectives, such as controlling inflation or stabilizing the currency. The National Bank of Serbia, for instance, has used spot auctions during financial crises to stabilize the foreign exchange market. It also organizes swap auctions and bilateral swap transactions for liquidity management.
- Forward auctions: In addition to spot auctions, some central banks, such as the Bank of Albania, have provisions for forward auctions. This allows banks to manage future exchange rate risks by entering into forward agreements.
- Interventions through market makers: Banks with market maker status, such as in Morocco under Bank Al-Maghrib, are authorized to participate in auctions to buy or sell US dollars in exchange for dirhams. This technique involves setting fluctuation bands and exchange rate limits.

Preannounced programs of future purchases and sales of foreign exchange typically are counted as one intervention in the foreign exchange market for the purpose of the de facto classification, with the assumption that the market prices the new information on the day the program is announced.[25] To avoid influencing market expectations about the exchange rate at the time when the actual interventions take place, the program of interventions should indicate in advance the nature, frequency, and size of the central bank's foreign exchange transactions. Among the mechanisms currently used in preannounced intervention programs, countries accumulate reserves following a preannounced calendar of auctions (Albania) or conduct purchases and sales of foreign exchange for the government pension fund (Norway). Similarly, a preannounced program that based its volume and direction of intervention on the difference in the projected and actual amount of oil and gas revenue was in use in Russia. In this case, an excess in the actual oil and gas revenue compared to the amount projected would produce a purchase of foreign currency, while a shortfall would result in a sale of foreign currency in the foreign exchange market. The size of these operations was announced at the beginning of every month, and purchases were evenly distributed throughout the month.

Official Exchange Rates

The vast majority (168) of IMF member countries report that they publish official exchange rates. This includes not only countries that have officially determined exchange rates, but, by definition, also those countries that report a reference or indicative exchange rate computed and/or published by the central bank (see the Compilation Guide). The calculation of these exchange rates is often based on market exchange rates, such as those used in interbank market transactions or in a combination of interbank and bank-client transactions during a specified observation period. The published exchange rate is used as a guide for market participants in their foreign exchange transactions, for accounting and customs valuation purposes, in exchange transactions with the government, and sometimes are prescribed for specific exchange transactions.

During the 2022–23 reporting period, several countries adopted new methods for calculating their official exchange rates (Armenia, Belarus, Burundi, Croatia, Honduras, Iraq, Kyrgyz Republic, Mauritania, Mauritius, Nicaragua, Russia, Rwanda, Serbia, Sudan, Ukraine). Countries from all income levels and various geographic regions are represented among the 26 members that report no official or reference exchange rates; half (13) are countries with no separate legal tender, 4 are soft pegs, 7 are floating or free floating, and 2 have the residual other managed de facto exchange rate arrangement. Among the countries that do not compute an official exchange rate, some, including Peru and Singapore, publish the market-determined rates on their monetary authority's website to promote information transparency.

[25] Very small, retail-type transactions are disregarded.

Table 4. De Facto Classification of Exchange Rate Arrangements, as of April 30, 2023, and Monetary Policy Frameworks

The classification system is based on the members' actual, de facto arrangements as identified by IMF staff, which may differ from their officially announced, de jure arrangements. The system classifies exchange rate arrangements primarily on the basis of the degree to which the exchange rate is determined by the market rather than by official action, with market-determined rates being on the whole more flexible. The system distinguishes among four major categories: hard pegs (such as exchange arrangements with no separate legal tender and currency board arrangements), soft pegs (including conventional pegged arrangements, pegged exchange rates within horizontal bands, crawling pegs, stabilized arrangements, and crawl-like arrangements), floating regimes (such as floating and free floating), and a residual category, other managed. This table presents members' exchange rate arrangements against alternative monetary policy frameworks to highlight the role of the exchange rate in broad economic policy and illustrate that different exchange rate regimes can be consistent with similar monetary frameworks. The monetary policy frameworks are as follows:

Exchange Rate Anchor

The monetary authority buys or sells foreign exchange to maintain the exchange rate at its predetermined level or within a range. The exchange rate thus serves as the nominal anchor or intermediate target of monetary policy. These frameworks are associated with exchange rate arrangements with no separate legal tender, currency board arrangements, pegs (or stabilized arrangements) with or without bands, crawling pegs (or crawl-like arrangements), and other managed arrangements.

Monetary Aggregate Target

The monetary authority uses its instruments to achieve a target growth rate for a monetary aggregate, such as reserve money, M1, or M2, and the targeted aggregate becomes the nominal anchor or intermediate target of monetary policy.

Inflation-Targeting Framework

This involves the public announcement of numerical targets for inflation, with an institutional commitment by the monetary authority to achieve these targets, typically over a medium-term horizon. Additional key features normally include increased communication with the public and the markets about the plans and objectives of monetary policymakers and increased accountability of the central bank for achieving its inflation objectives. Monetary policy decisions are often guided by the deviation of forecasts of future inflation from the announced inflation target, with the inflation forecast acting (implicitly or explicitly) as the intermediate target of monetary policy.

Other

The country has no explicitly stated nominal anchor, but rather monitors various indicators in conducting monetary policy. This category is also used when no relevant information on the country is available.

Foreign Exchange Markets

Measures liberalizing and tightening foreign exchange markets both increased sharply during 2022 through 2023, in contrast with the more temperate pace that was experienced in 2021.[26] The upward swing in both easing and tightening measures in 2022 and 2023 can be partially contributed to Türkiye and Ukraine, who account for almost half of all measures in 2022 and a third in 2023. For Ukraine, the changes in 2022 and 2023 reflect their response to both the economic and greater national security fallout following the Russian invasion starting in February 2022. For Türkiye, accelerating inflation, significant pressure on the lira, and the greater systemic financial uncertainty and turbulence that began in early 2022 and that has persisted throughout this reporting period attribute to their multitude of changes, particularly in their foreign exchange standing facility. In total, easing measures exceeded tightening measures in almost every market structure in both 2022 and 2023, and experienced greater liberalization across all foreign exchange market structures in comparison to 2021.

Member countries reported 121 changes in 2022 affecting foreign exchange markets, a sharp rise (about 105 percent) relative to 2021, reaching absolute levels close to 2020, which was an exceptional year due to the introduction of numerous COVID-19–related easing measures. The data for 2023 so far seem to stem the resurging trend somewhat with members reporting 60 changes for the partial year (Figure 3, panel 1). Easing and tightening measures are both up across the board in 2022 relative to 2021, increasing about 170 percent and 300 percent, respectively. As alluded to earlier, almost half of the voluminous increase in total measures in 2022 can be contributed to two countries, Türkiye and Ukraine, which both introduced 26 measures each in 2022.[27] Outside of these two, the countries with more than one easing or tightening change in 2022 include Russia (10); Ecuador and Kyrgyz Republic (4 each); Iraq (3); and Bangladesh, Brazil, Ethiopia, Lao P.D.R., Mozambique, Serbia, Sri Lanka, and Yemen (2 each). So far in 2023, Türkiye and Ukraine again are the main contributors to total changes, accounting for roughly a third (21 of 60), with Türkiye accounting for 16 and [26] Data for 2023 is partial: virtually all members report information as of June 30, 2023; about 18 percent of members' reporting periods end during the third quarter of 2023, and about the same number of members' reporting periods end during the fourth quarter of 2023.

[27] Excluding Türkiye and Ukraine from the 2021 and 2022 changes, easing and tightening measures still experience a 68 percent and 100 percent increase, respectively, in 2022 from 2021. This upsurge reflects in part the lingering effects from the COVID-19 pandemic, elevated global inflation, tightening financial conditions across both emerging market and advanced economies, and spillovers from Russia's invasion of Ukraine.

Ukraine for 5. Additionally, Iraq and Lao P.D.R. (3 each) and Brazil, Ecuador, and Mauritania (2 each) also reported more than one easing or tightening change in 2023 as well. Overall, the number of countries reporting changes in 2022 was broadly in line with past years (an increase of one); however, the number of countries reporting easing and tightening changes is higher in 2022 compared to 2021 (Figure 3, panel 2).

Note: The position date for 2023 varies by country but is at least the end of June 2023 for most countries with some members' reporting periods ending during the second half of 2023.

[1] Total changes in 2021 were revised from 58 to 57 overall (from 11 tightening to 12, and 27 neutral to 25) compared with the data published in the 2022 AREAER to better reflect IMF staff's assessment of reported changes.

[2] Total number of countries may not add up because certain countries implemented more than one type (easing, tightening, or neutral) of change during the year.

Easing measures in 2022 were primarily centered both in the spot and forward exchange markets, with attention to countries dealing with the fallout of the Russian invasion of Ukraine. Ukraine first introduced several tightening measures in their domestic foreign exchange market following Russia's invasion of the country in February 2022, but later relaxed some of the measures both in the spot and forward markets. Measures included pegging the hryvnia to the US dollar and restricting transactions, in both the spot and forward exchange market, involving the purchase of foreign currency by banks, nonbank financial institutions, and postal providers, only permitting the purchase of foreign currency from clients (selling foreign currency in cash to clients was prohibited). The NBU did begin to ease this foreign exchange cash restriction (within certain limits) in the spot exchange market in April 2022 and allowed financial institutions to sell foreign currency to individual clients within limits. Russia temporarily prohibited sales of foreign currency cash after the onset of the war and prohibited the purchase of foreign currency in the domestic market by nonresident legal entities from unfriendly countries. Subsequently, Russia relaxed the sale of foreign currency but only if obtained after April 9, 2022. Later, it also permitted banks to sell foreign currency to citizens, except US dollars and euros, even if the banks acquired these notes before April 9, 2022. In addition, it imposed price constraints on the purchase and sale of foreign currency by nonresident banks from unfriendly countries. Kyrgyz Republic, whose economy and currency is strongly tied to Russia, was responsible for 4 of the 11 tightening measures in the spot exchange market in 2022. Following the initial tumble of the Russian ruble in February 2022, Kyrgyz Republic tightened operations involving the Kazakhstani tenge by temporarily limiting the volume of transactions and reducing the purchase rate for financial institutions. Kyrgyz Republic introduced these tightening measures on March 18, 2022, to prevent Russians from using tenge to convert to Kyrgyz som and then to US dollars and thereby protect its international reserves. To further stabilize the situation in the domestic foreign exchange market, the Kyrgyz authorities limited the volume of transactions with foreign currency in cash between exchange offices and commercial banks in July 2022.

Outside of these three countries, Serbia and Sudan both introduced two measures each aimed at liberalizing their foreign exchange markets. Serbia liberalized its forward exchange market further by introducing bilateral swap transactions in January 2022, which ultimately replaced their foreign exchange swap auctions (see later discussion on foreign exchange auctions), while Sudan allowed commercial banks and foreign exchange bureaus to start determining their spot exchange rate freely starting in March 2022.

Of the 60 changes reported for 2023, 26 were reported as easing, slightly less than half of those reported in 2022, while the number of tightening measures decreased by a shade under half from 2022, to 22 changes. Türkiye reported the most easing or tightening actions (16) followed by Ukraine (5), Iraq and Lao P.D.R. (3 each), and Brazil, Ecuador, and Mauritania (2 each). A total of 21 changes were focused on foreign exchange standing facilities, on which all 16 of Türkiye's measures are concentrated (see later discussion on foreign exchange standing facilities). Outside of this, the spot exchange market registered 13 changes, with 8 easing and 5 tightening. Ukraine further liberalized, starting first in April 2023, allowing banks to include the calculation of the volume of sale of cash foreign exchange as 120 percent (previously 100 percent) of noncash foreign exchange purchases from individuals in foreign currency over a certain time period, then expanding these permissions to nonbank financial institutions and postal service operators in August. Guinea and Lebanon both changed nominal limits on minimal capital requirements. Guinea lowered the minimum capital requirement for foreign exchange bureaus from GF100 million to GF50 million in March 2023, and conversely, Lebanon stipulated Category A dealers to meet a minimum capital requirement of LL10 billion (up from LL75 million previously) from the effective date of May 17, 2023. Brazil further liberalized their foreign exchange market in July 2023 as the Central Bank of Brazil allowed payment institutions to apply for authorization to operate in the foreign exchange market to perform transactions with clients up to US$100,000, and to operate in the interbank market.

Further changes are discussed in the following under the different market segments. Changes in the structure and operation of members' foreign exchange markets are summarized in Table 6. While member countries can report a multitude of changes in their foreign exchange markets, particularly in years of elevated market turbulence and uncertainty, such as 2020 and 2022, the overall foreign exchange market structure and operations covered in the AREAER remain quite stable year to year.

Foreign Exchange Standing Facility, Allocations, Auctions, and Fixing

As Croatia joined the euro area in 2023, the number of countries that reported some type of official central bank facility decreased by 1, to 116, compared with the previous reporting period, as the Croatian National Bank no longer conducts foreign exchange auctions following the adoption of the euro. Central banks may provide access to foreign exchange to market participants through a standing facility, allocation to certain market participants, or the purchase and sale of foreign exchange through auctions or fixing sessions.

- Foreign exchange standing facilities—A total of 67 countries reported standing facilities in their jurisdictions. When a country has a foreign exchange standing facility, it means that the central bank typically stands ready to buy or sell foreign exchange to banks, thus providing a maximum and minimum exchange rate for their currency for a given day. Such facilities help regulate both money supply and liquidity and are usually instrumental in maintaining a hard or soft peg arrangement. All 12 countries with currency boards (such as the six countries that use the Eastern Caribbean dollar), 37 of 40 conventional pegs (Denmark, Iraq, and São Tomé and Príncipe are exceptions), and two of three crawling pegs (except Argentina) utilize standing facilities. The credibility of such arrangements depends largely on the availability of foreign exchange reserves backing the facility. The only country of 31 with a free-floating exchange rate arrangement that has a foreign exchange facility is Russia. No countries with a floating exchange rate arrangement report having a foreign exchange facility as well. Across the entire foreign exchange markets category, Türkiye introduced the most measures between 2022 and 2023, 42 of 181 in total. All but one of these measures were introduced in their foreign exchange standing facility (8 easing and 17 tightening in 2022, 6 easing and 10 tightening in 2023). Türkiye accounts for about 80 percent of all changes in standing facilities for 2022 and 2023. Starting in March 2022, against the backdrop of rapidly tightening global financial conditions, both the selling and buying rates for foreign exchange deposits across various maturity periods experienced incremental tightening measures to ease depreciation pressure on the lira while stemming the increasing trend of dollarization of its financial system by encouraging lenders to convert foreign exchange deposits into lira. The central bank continued increasing both the selling and buying rates of foreign exchange deposits at various maturities throughout 2023 as well.

  Additionally, with the lira severely depreciating in recent years, the Central Bank of Türkiye also started selling gold against the lira in February 2022 to try to support the currency. Outside of Türkiye, Bhutan and Samoa were the only countries to report tightening measures, while Russia was the only country to report an easing in their standing facility, first in February 2022 and then again in January 2023.

- Foreign exchange auctions—The number of countries reporting official foreign exchange auctions increased by 2, to 43, since the previous reporting period. As mentioned previously, Croatia ceased such auctions following the adoption of the euro, while Ghana, Honduras, and Mauritania introduced foreign exchange auctions. First, in March 2022, Ghana introduced special foreign exchange forward auctions for bulk oil distribution companies to provide foreign exchange for oil imports. To improve allocation of foreign exchange as a result of declining volumes in the interbank market, the Central Bank of Honduras reinstated a requirement for foreign exchange agents to surrender 100 percent of their daily foreign exchange income, which the central bank then allocated through foreign exchange auctions in April 2023. Mauritania enabled the Central Bank of Mauritania to intervene in the foreign exchange market via auctions starting in October 2023. Of the countries with auctions, almost 90 percent of them (38 of 43), report foreign exchange auctions as the only mechanism operated by the central bank. About a third (14 countries) have de facto exchange rate regimes that are floating, including two that are free floating (Mexico, Russia). Foreign exchange auctions can be used to intervene in the foreign exchange market and influence the exchange rate, support price discovery, and manage foreign exchange reserves. In times of market turbulence, foreign exchange auctions also enable central banks to mitigate volatility via mechanisms such as swap operations that provide liquidity to their respective local markets. For example, Serbia expanded on their auction framework in January 2022 when the National Bank of Serbia introduced bilateral swap transactions and subsequently stopped organizing regular two-week and three-month foreign exchange swap auctions in August 2022 (without excluding the possibility of re-introduction if the need arises). These bilateral swap operations proved to a be a more effective instrument for providing assistance to banks in dinar and foreign exchange liquidity management, primarily because of greater flexibility regarding the maturity and the conclusion date of the transactions compared to swap auctions. Finally, the Central Bank of Yemen scaled up the weekly amount in their single-price foreign exchange auctions from $15 million to $20 million in February 2022, and then again to $30 million in May 2022. However, because of inadequate foreign exchange reserves, the Central Bank of Yemen suspended weekly foreign exchange auctions in November 2023 but intends to resume the auctions as soon as practicable.

- Foreign exchange allocation systems—Foreign exchange allocation is often used to provide foreign exchange for strategic imports, such as oil or food, when foreign exchange reserves are scarce. For instance, it has at times been used to finance priority sector projects (Ethiopia) and strategic imports (Sudan). In addition, it may also be used to bolster exports through facilitating financing in foreign currency for input procurements by manufacturer-exporters (Bangladesh). Eighteen countries reported having a foreign exchange allocation system, two less than in the previous reporting period. The Bank of Mauritius discontinued bilateral sales to the State Trading Corporation in June 2022, while the Central Bank of Nigeria discontinued the sales at the retail, small and medium-sized enterprises, and invisible windows which the Central Bank of Nigeria sold foreign exchange through allocation as of June 2023 as all eligible foreign exchange transactions are now conducted and operated via the Nigerian Autonomous Foreign Exchange Fixing market. Outside of Mauritius and Nigeria, Iraq introduced three changes each in 2022 and 2023 to their allocation systems. The Central Bank of Iraq made five adjustments to the weekly limits on the amount banks and foreign exchange companies may buy in the central bank's foreign exchange currency sales window and subjecting banks to an advance deposit requirement which requires depositing the local currency equivalent of their cash and noncash purchase requests two days (previously seven days) before the auction. Mozambique also tightened their allocation system as they no longer provide foreign currency to the market for fuel imports as of June 2023. As allocation systems are frequently utilized when foreign reserves are scarce, they are found typically in countries with shallower financial depth. Of the 18 countries, only 2 are in the top half of the IMF Financial Development Index[28] (Islamic Republic of Iran, Trinidad and Tobago) and 1 is in the top quartile (Islamic Republic of Iran), with the average ranking of the 17 (Iraq is not included in the index) countries is at 123 (out of 183 countries in the index). About 60 percent of countries (11) with allocation systems also rely on other mechanisms, mainly standing facilities or fixing sessions. None of the 18 are classified as floating, with virtually all of them having a de facto soft peg arrangement (exceptions are Bangladesh, Islamic Republic of Iran, and Venezuela, which are classified as other managed arrangement, a residual category; see Table 1).
- Fixing sessions—This arrangement is characteristic of the early stage of foreign exchange market development when price discovery may be difficult. Fixing sessions allow the central bank to organize sessions in which market participants can submit buying and selling bids. The central bank uses these bids to find the market clearing exchange rate. The number of countries that reported operating fixing sessions declined by one (Mauritania) compared with the previous period. For Syria, fixing sessions are the only mechanism operated by the central bank (whereas the central banks of Islamic Republic of Iran and Mozambique also operate allocation systems). As the central bank monitors the market closely and often actively participates in the price formation by selling or buying during the session to achieve a certain exchange rate target, this mechanism is also utilized in countries with exchange rates that are not largely market determined. As such, in this current cycle of the AREAER, all three have managed arrangements (Iran and Syria are classified as other managed while Mozambique is classified as stabilized).

Interbank and Retail Foreign Exchange Markets

The number of countries that reported having a foreign exchange interbank market stands now at 174 (down from 175 in 2022) as Honduras reactivated the auction of foreign exchange as a mechanism for allocating foreign exchange instead of through the interbank foreign exchange market (see previous discussion). The other 19 jurisdictions that do not have an interbank market are typically countries where either security concerns made the operation of a foreign exchange market difficult in recent years, such as Somalia, South Sudan, and Yemen; where the legal framework does not allow the trading of foreign exchange among banks, such as Venezuela; in countries where the central bank maintains a conventional peg or currency board; or in jurisdictions where there is no separate legal tender. The latter two groups of countries consist of Aruba, Belize, Bhutan, Dominica, Eritrea, Kiribati, Lesotho, Libya, the Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Montenegro, Nauru, Palau, Timor-Leste, and Tuvalu. In most cases, these countries are small, and the size of the territory naturally limits the number of potential participants in the foreign exchange market. Honduras reported the most changes this reporting period with three changes, comprising almost one-fourth of all changes between 2022 and 2023 (3 of 13).[29] Two of the measures dealt with modifying the calculation of both the exchange band and reference exchange rate of the country's foreign exchange interbank market, while the other pertains to the reactivation of the foreign exchange auctions. Sri Lanka introduced two measures, first introducing a daily middle exchange rate with a variation margin to the domestic interbank foreign exchange market as guidance to interbank foreign exchange transactions in May 2022, then ultimately revoking and discounting this guidance in March 2023. Tanzania introduced a tightening measure by raising the minimum amount of foreign exchange tradable for a given quoted price to $250,000 (previously $50,000) in February 2022. For countries that have an interbank market, the form of operations may include over-the-counter markets, brokerage arrangements, and market-making arrangements. Thirty-five members allow all three types of systems. This group of 35 typically has market-based exchange arrangements and greater financial depth. About three-quarters of them (25) are classified as having de facto floating or free-floating arrangements. A total of 9 of the top 10 countries in the entire Financial Development Index (besides Switzerland, who is ranked first overall in the index), 23 of the 35 are in the top quartile of the index, while 32 of 35 are in top half (Kenya, Pakistan, and Papua New Guinea do not fall in the top 50th percentile of the index), with an average ranking of 37 out of the 183 countries in the index.

- Over-the-counter operations—These account for most of the world's interbank markets. The number of countries in this group has grown nearly every year since 2013, when it comprised 127 countries to 150 as of 2023 (same as in the previous reporting period). Despite no formal interbank foreign exchange market in St. Kitts and Nevis and St. Vincent and the Grenadines, banks in these countries can trade freely with one another. Argentina introduced the only measure in 2023, where they eliminated a certain provision that allowed foreign exchange purchase and sales between authorized institutions outside the SIOPEL system (an electronic trading system where foreign exchange and securities are traded), when one or both parties are not authorized to operate in this system in a daily amount not exceeding the equivalent of $800,000 (considering the sum of each institution's purchases and sales). In total, although this type of foreign exchange market appears to be gaining popularity among IMF members, 24 jurisdictions with interbank markets still report that they do not engage in over-the-counter operations. These countries do not share any particular characteristic in terms of size, income level, or financial market sophistication.

[29] A total of 4 of the 13 measures reported here were labeled as neutral in 2022 and 2023, two of which pertained to Honduras. These were either extensions of earlier easing or tightening measures or those that did not clearly ease or tighten regulation.

- Brokerage arrangements—A total of 51 countries reported having a brokerage system, same as in the previous reporting period. These arrangements are typically found in countries with deeper financial markets. The top 14 countries in the Financial Development Index and 21 of the top 25 overall in the index all have brokerage systems. In total, 45 of 49 countries score higher than the world average on the Financial Development Index (El Salvador, Kenya, Pakistan, and Papua New Guinea fall below the world average; Andorra and San Marino are not listed in index).
- Market-making agreements—A total of 72 countries reported having market-making agreements, the same as in the previous reporting period. There are no reported changes in 2022–23. The prevalence of these agreements increases as income level goes up and exchange rate arrangements become more flexible, but there exists some heterogeneity. Regarding level of income, about one-fifth (11 of 59) of low-income developing countries, two-fifths (36 of 96) of emerging market economies, and two-thirds (25 of 39) of advanced economies report such agreements. With respect to exchange rate flexibility, about one-tenth (3 of 26) of hard pegs, one-quarter (24 of 87) of soft pegs, two-fifths (7 of 18) of other managed arrangements, and three-fifths (38 of 63) of floating arrangements report market-making agreements.

Most member countries report a framework for the operation of foreign exchange bureaus; the majority impose some type of licensing requirement. The current reporting period saw a mix of tightening and easing measures. Among tightening changes, the National Bank of the Republic of North Macedonia strengthened the licensing criteria for owners and managers of foreign exchange bureaus, the National Bank of Ethiopia increased their fee on foreign exchange transactions from 1.5 percent to 2.5 percent, and Pakistan requires exchange companies, as of February 2022, to surrender 100 percent of foreign currency received on account of inward home remittances in the interbank market on the same day. Honduras reduced the exchange commission that foreign exchange agents may charge their clients to a maximum of 0.5 percent compared with 0.7 percent previously. With the imposition of martial law following Russia's invasion of Ukraine in February 2022, the NBU temporarily changed its approach to foreign exchange interventions, whereby the NBU now engages in US dollars and euro sale and purchase transactions with banks and international financial institutions daily. The NBU stopped sales and purchases of euros and now conducts operation solely in US dollars as of May 2022. Among easing changes, Sudan further liberalized its foreign exchange market in March 2022, as commercial banks and foreign exchange bureaus may freely determine their rate on both a daily basis and without any restrictions and increased the maximum profit margin to 1 percent for foreign exchange bureaus. Mozambique no longer requires commercial banks to quote exchange rates complying with a maximum spread of 2 percent between the exchange rates for buying and selling foreign exchange as of the end of 2022. Lao P.D.R. balanced both easing and tightening measures by first reducing the limit for selling foreign exchange to individuals by commercial banks and foreign exchange agents within the limit of 15 million kip (approximately $1,000) a person per day in June 2022, then closing down entirely foreign exchange service agents under commercial banks in January 2023 to comply with a new Bank of Lao P.D.R. decision that allows only commercial banks in Lao P.D.R. to operate foreign exchange services. Easing measures in turn manifested in the form of widening the trading band of commercial banks' exchange rate relative to the daily reference rate set by the central bank for kip against US dollars from ±1.5 percent to ±4.5 percent in October 2022, then again to ±7.5 percent in June 2023, while also increasing the margin of buying and selling rates for the US dollar, euro, Thai baht, Chinese yuan, and other foreign currencies.

Other Measures

Most of the changes in other measures during the reporting period refer to forward operations, exchange rate structure, other legal tender, and taxes on foreign exchange transactions.

- Forwards—A total of 15 measures were reported across 2022 and 2023: 14 in 2022 (10 easing, 2 neutral, and 2 tightening) and 1 in 2023 (easing). Ukraine was the primarily driver of these changes, accounting for 7 of the 15, all in 2022 (5 easing and 2 tightening). The NBU initially tightened foreign exchange market measures by prohibiting banks from trading in foreign currency except for certain transactions. Over the following months, Ukraine permitted swap transactions with resident clients if the first part of the transaction was a purchase of foreign currency from a resident client and permitted transactions involving the purchase of foreign currencies by clients under forward contracts that were signed prior to February 23, 2022. The NBU did introduce one more tightening measure amid these preliminary easing measures in

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

April 2022 when they prohibited banks from entering into money market derivative contracts (other than swaps) to support the stability of hryvnia. However, subsequently, the NBU did ease further in the summer of 2022 when they extended the permissions to conduct swap transactions to foreign banks/depositors that have a securities account at the NBU. Beyond Ukraine, during the reporting period, the Central Bank of Egypt issued a circular in October 2022 regarding banks' conducting foreign exchange transaction in local currency through forward transactions, currency swaps, and nondeliverable forward transactions, given these transactions are conducted for commercial purposes and through the same bank. The Bank of Russia launched a new standing facility in January 2023 to provide yuan via swap transactions for the sale of yuan for rubles.

- Exchange rate structure—There were several changes in the number of countries maintaining a dual or multiple exchange rate structure. Currently, 21 countries are classified as having more than one exchange rate, of which 11 are dual and 10 are multiple. This is mainly a result of specific exchange rates applied to certain transactions or because of actual or potential deviations of more than 2 percent between official and other exchange rates and hence resulting in multiple currency practices under Article VIII (see next section). During this reporting period, the exchange rate structure of Armenia was reclassified from dual to unitary due to the elimination of an MCP effective as of January 1, 2022, and foreign exchange transactions between the Ministry of Finance and the Central Bank of Armenia now take place at the market-determined bid/ask prices quoted by the Central Bank of Armenia. While in practice the exchange rate structure is still classified as multiple, Sudan has worked toward reducing the gap between the official rate and the parallel market rate following the adoption of floating exchange rate policy. As of March 2022, the exchange rate in Sudan is freely determined by commercial banks and exchange bureaus daily.
- Other legal tender—A total of 16 countries officially allow the use of another legal tender in their territory, the same as the previous reporting period. There was a sole change this reporting period where Bhutan recalibrated the Indian rupee travel allowance for Bhutanese from Rs10,000 a month to Rs50,000 a year in October 2023.
- Taxes and subsidies on foreign exchange transactions—Overall, 36 countries report taxing or subsidizing foreign exchange transactions during the reporting period, a net increase by two compared with the previous reporting period. In Bangladesh, the incentive against workers' remittances was increased to 2.5 percent from 2 percent in January 2022, while Mauritania applies, as of November 2023, a commission of 0.2 percent to all foreign exchange operations carried out in the banking system. In total, 17 taxes and/or subsidies were reported in 2022–23: 11 easing and 6 tightening. Ecuador made up roughly a third of all measures, with four in 2022 and two in 2023, all related to reductions in the capital outflow tax. The first reduction came into effect in January 2022, reducing the tax from 5 percent to 4.75 percent, with the final reduction of the reporting period, taking place in July 2023, ultimately bringing the outflow tax down to 3.5 percent. In addition, Russia introduced four measures in 2022, initially introducing a 30 percent commission on the purchase of foreign currencies by individuals through brokers on March 3, 2022, then reducing this commission to 12 percent the following day, simultaneously introducing a 12 percent commission for legal entities, and finally removing the requirement to charge a commission on April 11, 2022, for both individuals and legal entities. In September 2022, Lebanon canceled a subsidized exchange rate for oil derivate imports (for example, gasoline and diesel gas), while maintaining subsidies on imports of certain essential food and medical supplies. Outside of the Ecuador and Mauritania cases, the only other 2023 measure pertained to Brazil, which reduced the Imposto sobre Operações Financeiras (Tax on Financial Operations) general tax rate from 6.38 percent to 5.38 percent in January 2023.

Member Countries' Obligations and Status under Articles VIII and XIV

This section provides an overview of the status of IMF members' acceptance of the obligations of Article VIII, Sections 2(a), 3, and 4, of the IMF's Articles of Agreement and of the use of the transitional arrangements of Article XIV. It also describes recent developments in restrictive exchange measures—namely, exchange restrictions and MCPs subject to IMF jurisdiction under Articles VIII and XIV and measures imposed by members solely for national and/or international security reasons.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

In accepting the obligations of Article VIII, Sections 2(a), 3, and 4, members agree not to impose restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions or engage in discriminatory currency arrangements or MCPs, except with IMF approval.[30] If Article XIV members introduce exchange restrictions or MCPs after joining the IMF, these restrictive measures are considered to have been imposed under Article VIII.

Status under Articles VIII and XIV

The number of countries that have accepted Article VIII remained unchanged at 174 members[31] in 2022 (Figure 4). In the 21st century, 25 members accepted Article VIII obligations, including some of them at the time of their joining the IMF, and, accordingly, the number of Article VIII members has increased by 16.8 percent, reaching 91.6 percent at the end of 2020 and remaining unchanged at the end of 2021 and 2022. Since 2000, there has been some progress in Article VIII acceptance among countries that have availed themselves of the transitional provisions of Article XIV. Their number had dropped from 34 in 2000 to 16 by the end of 2021 and remained unchanged in 2021 and 2022. Progress was most notable during 2000–05, when 15 Article XIV countries accepted Article VIII obligations. Since 2000, four countries have joined the IMF, simultaneously accepting Article VIII obligations (Andorra, Montenegro, Nauru, Timor-Leste), while four other countries (Kosovo, Serbia, South Sudan, Tuvalu) joined the IMF availing themselves of the temporary provisions of Article XIV. Three of these four countries (Kosovo, Serbia, Tuvalu) subsequently accepted Article VIII obligations. Other countries that accepted Article VIII starting from 2000 are Albania, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Colombia, Democratic Republic of Congo, Egypt, Iran, Lao P.D.R., Libya, Mozambique, Myanmar, Sudan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, Vietnam, and Zambia.

As of December 31, 2022, many members in Article XIV status continued to maintain restrictions subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII; however, their number has been reduced in 2022. Among the 16 members[32] in Article XIV status, 3 do not maintain restrictive exchange measures but have not yet decided to accept the obligations under Article VIII. Four countries maintain both original or adapted Article XIV exchange measures and Article VIII restrictions. The remaining nine Article XIV countries maintain exchange measures under Article VIII only.

Restrictive Exchange Measures[33]

The first section in the following describes recent developments in exchange restrictions—measures that limit the availability and use of foreign currency for payments and transfers for current international transactions—and MCPs subject to IMF jurisdiction under Articles VIII and XIV. In particular, changes in 2022 to exchange restrictions and MCPs are indicated as reported in the latest IMF staff reports as of December [30] Countries that have accepted the obligations under Article VIII are referred to as "Article VIII members" or "Article VIII countries"; in contrast, those that continue to avail themselves of the transitional provisions of Article XIV are referred to as "Article XIV members" or "Article XIV countries" in this report.

[31] In this section, Aruba, Curaçao, and Sint Maarten (all territories of the Kingdom of the Netherlands) are counted as one member. Also, Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR (both in the People's Republic of China) are counted as one member.

[32] As of December 31, 2022, the member countries that make use of the transitional arrangements under Article XIV are Afghanistan, Angola, Bhutan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Iraq, Liberia, Maldives, Nigeria, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, Syria, and Turkmenistan.

[33] A new MCP policy was adopted on July 1, 2022, which elaborates on the provision in Article VIII, Section 3, of the IMF's Articles of Agreement. The main changes in the new policy focus on three areas: (1) an MCP will arise due to an official action that segments foreign exchange markets or increases or subsidizes the cost of certain foreign exchange transactions (for example, exchange taxes), (2) MCPs will be identified on the basis of a new country-specific market-based rule, and (3) the new policy ensures better alignment of the MCP policy with other relevant IMF policies. The new policy became effective on February 1, 2024, after a transitional period to allow members to adjust their policies. Under the new policy, during the transitional period, no MCPs are to be found where (1) official action takes the form of (a) an one-day lagged official exchange rate computed and used as specified in the new policy, (b) broken cross-rates, or (c) a foreign exchange auction consistent with specified criteria under the new policy; and (2) an MCP results from exchange rate spreads arising in an illegal parallel market. Existing MCPs based on the types of official action that will no longer be covered under the MCP policy are considered eliminated as of the approval date of the new policy. See "Review of the Fund's Policy on Multiple Currency Practices—Proposals for Reforms" (2022).

31, 2022, as well as by counting those that affected different types of transactions/exchange rate spreads. The subsequent section describes developments in measures imposed by members solely for national or international security reasons during 2022.

Exchange Restrictions and Multiple Currency Practices[34]

The number of countries[35] maintaining restrictive exchange measures increased by one in 2022, while the composition of countries maintaining such measures has changed (Table 7).[36] Article VIII members maintained more restrictive exchange measures in 2022 (94 measures that affected 108 types of transactions/exchange rate spreads) than Article XIV members (45 measures that affected 108 types of transactions/spreads).[37]

In 2022, two Article VIII members removed all previously identified restrictive exchange measures: Armenia (one MCP) and Curaçao and Sint Maarten of the Kingdom of the Netherlands[38] (one exchange restriction). Also, other three Article VIII members (Argentina, Jamaica, Zimbabwe) and four Article XIV members (Bhutan, Maldives, São Tomé and Príncipe, South Sudan) eliminated restrictive exchange measures but not [34] Countries maintaining exchange restrictions and/or MCPs whose IMF staff reports are unpublished are not mentioned in this section unless the authorities have consented to publication. However, their restrictive exchange measures are included in the numbers.

[35] In this section, Aruba, Curaçao, and Sint Maarten (all territories of the Kingdom of the Netherlands) are counted as one member. Also, Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR (both in the People's Republic of China) are counted as one member.

[36] The AREAER does not indicate whether the Executive Board of the IMF has approved such measures.

[37] In case the staff report suggests that restrictive exchange measures apply to more than one type of transaction/exchange rate spread, the number of exchange measures in this section and in Table 7 reflects the number of transactions/exchange rate spreads to which it applies. This is the second report in which the count of exchange restrictions and MCPs are based on including them in all relevant types of transactions/exchange rate spreads. Hence, the numbers for 2020 are not comparable to those reported in Table 7 of past AREAERs.

[38] Information for Curaçao and Sint Maarten is reported together as they have a common central bank.

all of them (see the following). On the other hand, exchange restrictions and/or MCPs were identified in two other Article VIII members which previously maintained exchange system free of restrictive exchange measures: Sierra Leone (one exchange restriction and two MCPs) and Sri Lanka (one MCP[39]). Also, restrictive exchange measures were identified in four other Article VIII members (Argentina, Jamaica, Pakistan, Zimbabwe; see the following). As a result, in 2022, the overall number of members that maintained restrictive exchange measures increased by 1 (Article VIII country), to 46 countries.

In 2022, the overall number of restrictive exchange measures increased by 16 (Table 7). The number of such measures in Article VIII countries increased by 29, whereas in Article XIV members they decreased by 13.

In 2022, 20 restrictive exchange measures (9 exchange restrictions affecting 11 types of transactions and 11 MCPs affecting 12 types of spreads) were reported to have been eliminated,[40] while 31 restrictive exchange measures (19 exchange restrictions affecting 26 types of transactions and 12 MCPs affecting 13 types of spreads) were introduced or newly identified. Article VIII members account for all 31 newly identified restrictive exchange measures (that affected 39 types of transactions/spreads) and 9 (of the 20) removals including 3 exchange restrictions and 6 MCPs (that affected 10 types of transactions/exchange rate spreads including 3 related to exchange restrictions and 7 to exchange rate spreads).

In 2022, in addition to Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka mentioned earlier that formerly had exchange systems free of restrictive exchange measures, such measures were identified or reported in the following Article VIII members: Argentina (15 exchange restrictions, that affected 22 types of transactions, and 6 MCPs[41]), Jamaica (1 MCP), Pakistan (1 exchange restriction), and Zimbabwe (2 exchange restrictions and 2 MCPs, the latter affecting 3 types of exchange rate spreads). No new Article VIII or Article XIV restrictive exchange measures were identified in Article XIV members in 2022.

In contrast, in addition to Armenia and Curaçao and Sint Maarten of the Kingdom of the Netherlands mentioned earlier, which removed all their restrictive measures, seven other countries eliminated some restrictive exchange measures, but not all. Thus, in the following Article VIII countries restrictive exchange measures were found eliminated in 2022: Argentina (2 MCPs), Jamaica (1 MCP), and Zimbabwe (2 exchange restrictions and 2 MCPs). At the same time, in the following Article XIV members several restrictive exchange measures were reported as eliminated: Bhutan (1 Article XIV exchange restriction that affected 3 types of transactions and 3 Article VIII exchange restrictions), Maldives (1 exchange restriction and 1 MCP), São Tomé and Príncipe (1 MCP), and South Sudan (2 Article VIII MCPs as well as 1 Article XIV exchange restriction and 1 Article XIV MCP).

The overall average number of restrictive measures increased to 3.4 from 3.1 per country in 2022. The average number of measures per country decreased to 3.7 from 4.7 for Article XIV countries and increased to 3.3 from 2.5 for Article VIII countries. Although the overall number of restrictive exchange measures maintained by Article XIV countries was lower than in Article VIII members in 2022, they continued to maintain more exchange restrictions and MCPs per country than Article VIII countries (given the relatively small number of Article XIV members); however, the gap decreased significantly in 2022 due to the number of restrictive exchange measures eliminated in 2022.

Exchange restrictions initially reported in 2022 apply to a wide range of transactions, mostly owing to a significant number of restrictive exchange measures identified in Argentina in the context of rising foreign exchange pressures and low and falling reserves. Thus, in Argentina, identified exchange restrictions that affected different types of transactions can be classified in the following five main categories:[42]

[39] The measure was introduced in December 2020 and was reflected in the IMF staff report as of December 31, 2022.

[40] This section does not reflect changes in members' restrictive measures eliminated in 2022 (or earlier) but whose removal is reflected in the IMF staff reports issued after December 31, 2022.

[41] One temporary MCP related to soybeans exchange rate was in force during September 2022.

[42] Items 1 to 4 are based on IMF Country Report 22/92 and IMF Country Report 22/322, while the 2023 AREAER country chapter for Argentina only includes exchange restrictions and MCPs as reported in the latest IMF staff report issued as of December 31, 2022 (IMF Country Report 22/388, as reflected in Table 8). The former two staff reports were issued prior to the latter staff report and hence not included in the country chapter since, as per the AREAER Compilation Guide, information on exchange restrictions and/or MCPs should be quoted from the latest IMF staff report as of December 31, 2022. However, to provide a complete picture of developments related to exchange restrictions and MCPs, this report includes information from the aforementioned reports, both issued in the reporting period, as reflected in Table 7.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

1. General exchange restrictions arising from limitations on access to the foreign exchange market for making any payments or transfers for current international transactions, which prevent access to the foreign exchange market unless the requester (1) does not in the previous and subsequent 90 days undertake certain transactions in the securities market, and (2) is not included in the tax authorities' database of apocryphal invoices or documents.

2. Restrictions on payments for imports of goods and services including the following: one exchange restriction that affected two types of transactions arising from limitations on the amounts of foreign exchange that can be accessed for payments for imports of goods and services, one exchange restriction that affected two types of transactions arising from limitations on advance payments for imports of goods and services, one exchange restriction arising from limitations on payments for imports of luxury goods, and one exchange restriction arising from a preauthorization requirement for payments of services to related parties.

3. Invisible transactions including the following: one exchange restriction arising from limitations on accessing the foreign exchange market to make transfers of foreign currency abroad as profits and dividends to nonresident shareholders, and one exchange restriction that affected six types of transactions arising from limitations on access to foreign exchange by resident and nonresident individuals.

4. Restrictions on payments of interest and amortization on external loans including the following: two exchange restrictions arising from limitations on access to foreign exchange for payment of external indebtedness (principal and interest) which require that all external debt proceeds have been surrendered into the local exchange market prior to accessing foreign exchange to service external debt, two exchange restrictions arising from mandatory refinancing requirements (interest and principal), two exchange restrictions arising from limitations on advance payments of debt (interest and principal), and one exchange restriction arising from the prior Central Bank of Argentina consent for payments of principal (including amortization) to related parties.

5. Exchange tax that gives rise to one exchange restriction which also was found as an MCP arising from a 30 percent tax on the purchase of foreign exchange by individuals and on payments for consumption abroad.

As a part of policy package to address external imbalances, Pakistan introduced one exchange restriction arising from the authorities' requirement to seek payment authorization from the State Bank of Pakistan before initiating transactions for importing certain goods, with approval granted in a discretionary manner. In Sierra Leone, with the backdrop of the foreign exchange shortages, one exchange restriction was found arising from the prioritization of foreign exchange through various Bank of Sierra Leone facilities. In Zimbabwe, two exchange restrictions were found arising from (1) the rationing of foreign exchange sales through weekly Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe auctions and (2) earmarking of foreign exchange to finance letters of credit for certain imports.

In contrast, a number of countries removed exchange restrictions which affected different types of transactions. Thus, Bhutan eliminated (1) one Article XIV exchange restriction related to the availability of foreign exchange for three types of transactions (travel, invisibles, and private transfers), and (2) three Article VIII exchange restrictions which arose from (a) banning residents who do not comply with the requirement to repatriate export proceeds from accessing foreign exchange for unrelated imports, (b) restricting the availability of Indian rupees for making payments and transfers to India for certain current international transactions, and (c) banning access to Indian rupees for unrelated current international transactions for those who contravene Royal Monetary Authority's 2012 guidelines on Indian rupee transactions. Curaçao and Sint Maarten of the Kingdom of the Netherlands eliminated, effective January 1, 2022, one exchange restriction which arose from the limitation on distribution of dividends or profits to nonresidents. Following the application of the transitional arrangements under the new MCP policy, effective July 1, 2022, an exchange restriction in connection with the additional cost for obtaining foreign exchange in the parallel market was considered eliminated in Maldives.[43] In the same vein, in South Sudan, an exchange restriction under Article XIV, in connection with the extra burden arising from the spread between the parallel market exchange rate and the formal commercial exchange market rate was considered eliminated with the application of the transitional arrangements under the new MCP policy. Zimbabwe removed the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe's guidance which required commercial banks to prioritize their foreign exchange sale to finance specific categories of international transactions. Also, Zimbabwe removed an exchange restriction which arose from the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe's allocations of foreign exchange to finance certain necessary imports while limiting the availability of foreign exchange for payments and transfers for other current international transactions not eligible to receive such allocations.

[43] See paragraph 41 of "Review of the Fund's Policy on Multiple Currency Practices–Proposals for Reform" (2022)

The types of newly identified MCPs also varied in 2022. It was reported that Argentina maintained six MCPs as follows: (1) one MCP (which also was found as an exchange restriction) arising from a 30 percent tax on the purchase of foreign exchange by individuals and on payments for consumption abroad; (2) one MCP arising from the 35 percent tax based on the potential spread exceeding 2 percent between the market exchange rate and the effective exchange rate of the transaction (considering that the tax can be credited toward other tax obligations at the end of the tax year); (3) one MCP caused by the limitations on the availability of foreign exchange which channels current international transactions to the parallel market, and resulting in the large spread between the official exchange rate and such market; (4) one MCP arising from the authorization granted to tourists visiting Argentina to sell US dollars at the parallel exchange rate up to a certain threshold; (5) one MCP arising from a temporary facility to liquidate during September 2022 the foreign exchange proceeds from the exportation of soybean products at a favorable exchange; and (6) one MCP arising from reintroduction of a temporary foreign exchange incentive scheme to encourage soy exporters and producers to sell their stocks.[44] In Jamaica, an MCP was found where the exchange rates used for the resale of foreign exchange auction funds (capped with a specified spread) by participants may deviate by more than 2 percent from the exchange rates at which such participants sell foreign exchange other than from the foreign exchange auction funds. Sierra Leone was found to maintain two MCP because of (1) the use of the Bank of Sierra Leone rate (calculated weekly and computed based on transactions over the previous five business days) which exceeded the prevailing market rate by more than 2 percent, and (2) the use of an exchange rate for transactions under certain facilities (calculated based on commercial banks' weighted average exchange rates on the previous day) which may exceed 2 percent from the prevailing market rate at the time of the transactions. In Sri Lanka, an MCP was found arising from a temporary incentive scheme for inward worker remittances launched in December 2020 under which the authorities offered an additional incentive over the exchange rates used by banks for such remittances, with the deviation between the more favorable (effective) exchange rate used for qualifying inward workers remittances and the exchange rate used for other inward remittances being more than 2 percent. In Zimbabwe, one MCP which affected two types of transactions was found arising from the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe's sale of foreign exchange to successful bidders during weekly auctions at exchange rates that may differ by more than 2 percent (1) from each other and (2) from exchange rates being used for official transactions, transactions to fulfill the foreign exchange surrender requirement, or market transactions. Also, one other MCP arising from the use of the official rate for official transactions and transactions made to fulfill the surrender requirement was found in Zimbabwe, because this rate may differ by more than 2 percent from the market exchange rate.

In contrast, in 2022, several previously identified MCPs were reported to have been eliminated. These include MCPs arising from the official multiple price auction in Argentina (two MCPs) and Jamaica (one MCP); one MCP in Armenia which arose from a 2007 agreement between the Ministry of Finance and the Central Bank of Armenia to settle some budgetary transactions at an agreed accounting exchange rate throughout the fiscal year; one Article XIV MCP which arose from spreads between the official (indicative) rate and the commercial banks' (market) rate in South Sudan; one MCP which arose from the bureau market exchange rate exceeding more than 2 percent of that in the interbank market in Zimbabwe; and one MCP which arose from the spread of more than 2 percent between the prior business date's interbank rate at which the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe conducted foreign exchange allocation for certain imports and purchased foreign exchange proceeds from exports and the prevailing foreign exchange rate for other foreign exchange transactions taking place on the same date in Zimbabwe. In addition, following the application of transitional arrangements under the new MCP policy, which was adopted on July 1, 2022, a number of MCPs which arose from the spread with the parallel market exchange rates were considered eliminated in the following Article XIV countries: Maldives (one Article VIII MCP), São Tomé and Príncipe (one Article VIII MCP), and South Sudan [44] Items (1) to (5) are based on IMF Country Report 22/92 and IMF Country Report 22/322. See footnote 42.

(one Article XIV MCP and one Article VIII MCP). Also, one MCP arising from the favorable exchange rate used for conversion of proceeds from the exportation of soybean products was found as introduced and eliminated in 2022 in Argentina.

Table 8 provides the description of restrictive exchange measures as indicated in the latest IMF staff reports as of December 31, 2022.

Exchange Measures Maintained for Security Reasons

Several member countries maintain measures solely for national and/or international security reasons, which could give rise to exchange restrictions under IMF jurisdiction if applied to payments and transfers for current international transactions. These restrictions, like others, require prior IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a). However, because the IMF does not provide a suitable forum to discuss the political and military considerations that lead to measures of this kind, it established a special procedure for such measures to be notified to and approved by the IMF.[45] In total, 120 member countries and their territories reported in 2022 to the IMF that they maintained measures solely for security reasons, including 16 that reported changes in such measures in 2022. In general, the restrictions are financial sanctions to combat the financing of terrorism or financial sanctions against certain governments, entities, and individuals in accordance with UN Security Council resolutions, EU regulations, or decisions adopted by members on their own initiative.

[1] Information is based on IMF staff reports issued as of December 31, 2022, for members and their territories. The number of restrictions and/or multiple currency practices (MCPs) may have changed subsequent to the date they were reported. The table also includes data on exchange restrictions and MCPs maintained by countries whose IMF staff reports are unpublished.

[2] Where the description of an exchange restriction or an MCP in the staff report suggests that it applies to more than one type of transaction/exchange rate spread, the exchange measure is reflected in all the relevant types of transactions/exchange rate spreads reported in this table. This is the second report in which the count of exchange restrictions and MCPs are based on including them in all relevant types of transactions/exchange rate spreads. Hence, the numbers for 2020 are not comparable to those reported in Table 7 of past publications of the AREAER.

[3] Restrictive measures in a member's territory are included in the total for the member country.

Table 8. Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices, by Country, as of December 31, 2022

Country[1]	Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices[2]
Albania	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Albania states that, as of November 14, 2022, Albania continues to maintain an exchange restriction in the form of outstanding debit balances on inoperative bilateral payment agreements with two IMF member countries. Those debit balances were in place before Albania became an IMF member in 1991 and relate to debt in nonconvertible and formerly nonconvertible currencies. Despite repeated efforts by the Albanian authorities, no agreement has been reached with the counterparties. (Country Report No. 22/362)
Angola	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation and Sixth Review under the Extended Arrangement of the Extended Fund Facility and Request for a Waiver of Nonobservance of a Performance Criterion with Angola states that, as of December 7, 2021, Angola maintained two MCPs that are subject to approval under Article VIII, Section 3, that arise from the lack of a mechanism to prevent potential spreads in excess of 2% emerging (1) between successful bids within the National Bank of Angola's (Banco Nacional de Angola – BNA's) foreign exchange auction and (2) for transactions that take place at the reference rate in place and the rate at which transactions take place in the foreign exchange auction on that day remain. Angola maintains restrictions on the making of payments and transfers for current international transactions under the transitional arrangements of Article XIV, Section 2. The measures maintained pursuant to Article XIV are (1) limits on the availability of foreign exchange for invisible transactions, that is travel expenses and (2) limits on unrequited transfers to foreign-based individuals and institutions. Exchange restrictions subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Section 2(a) were removed, specifically (1) the discriminatory application of the 0.1% stamp tax on foreign exchange operations by natural persons, (2) the operation of the priority list for access to US dollars at the official exchange rate, and (3) a special tax of 10% on transfers to nonresidents under contracts of foreign technical assistance or management services. The MCP subject to approval under Article VIII, Section 3, arising from the discriminatory application of the 0.1% stamp tax on foreign exchange operations by natural persons was also removed. (Country Report No. 22/11)
Argentina	The IMF staff report for the Third Review under the Extended Arrangement under the Extended Fund Facility, Request for Waivers of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, and Financing Assurances Review with Argentina states that as of December 12, 2022, Argentina has taken a number of measures since early October 2022 with respect to its foreign exchange regime that give rise to new MCPs and exchange restrictions, and intensify pre-existing exchange restrictions. These measures also amount to nonobservance of the continuous performance criteria on the introduction or intensification/modification of exchange restrictions/MCPs. More specifically, the key changes fall within the following categories: (1) Foreign Exchange Incentive Scheme: On November 28, the Argentine government reinstated its Foreign Exchange Incentive Scheme to encourage soy exporters and producers to sell their stocks that was introduced on a temporary basis, and which expired in September. Under the current scheme, exporters of soybean and derivates can fulfill their surrender requirement by exchanging their dollar receipts at a more preferential exchange rate of 230 pesos per dollar. Because of the large spread between the preferential exchange rate and the official exchange rate (which trades at around 168 pesos per dollar), which exceeds 2%, and given that the old measure had expired before the reintroduction, this measure constitutes a new MCP subject to IMF jurisdiction. (2) Exchange Tax: Argentina maintains an exchange restriction and an MCP arising from a 30% tax on the purchase of foreign exchange by individuals and on payments for consumption abroad. Under Decree No. 682/2022, the 30% tax has been extended to purchases of foreign currency for the payment of (a) personal, cultural, and recreational services and (b) the importation of a list of luxury goods. The extension of the coverage of the 30% tax amounts to an intensification of the existing exchange restriction. It also amounts to a modification of the MCP. (Country Report No. 22/388)[3]
Aruba, Kingdom of the Netherlands	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation Discussions with Aruba states that as of March 31, 2021, Aruba maintains an unapproved exchange restriction arising from the foreign exchange tax on payments by residents to nonresidents (1.3% of the transaction value). In March 2020, the Central Bank of Aruba (CBA) halted the issuance of new foreign exchange licenses, limiting most of the outgoing capital and also some current transactions. The following measures constitute new exchange restrictions: (1) prohibition on actual payment and/or transfer of dividends to nonresident shareholders, and of net income from other investment; (2) restriction on repayment and interest payments of loans below the relevant thresholds (that is, Afl. 300,000 for natural persons and Afl. 750,000 for legal entities) obtained after March 17, 2020; and (3) prohibition on payment of management fees to affiliated companies. (Country Report No. 21/81)
Bangladesh	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Bangladesh states that, as of February 15, 2022, Bangladesh maintained one restriction subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a) on the convertibility and transferability of proceeds of current international transactions in nonresident taka accounts (NRTAs). (Country Report No. 22/71)
Bhutan	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Bhutan states that, as of April 26, 2022, Bhutan continues to avail itself of transitional arrangements under Article XIV, Section 2, pursuant to which it maintains exchange restrictions in connection with: (1) foreign exchange balancing requirement on remittances of income in convertible currencies or other foreign currencies from FDI and (2) on the availability of foreign exchange for importers who have not provided evidence that goods for which payments have been made were actually imported. Bhutan also maintains exchange restrictions subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a) in connection with: (1) the foreign exchange balancing requirements for imports of capital goods (for projects involving FDI) and primary raw materials (for certain industrial projects); (2) requiring FDI companies to pay for their operational expenses (including insurance payments) from their own foreign exchange resources; and (3) requiring Bhutanese companies to pay the interest on and amortization of external loans from their own foreign currency resources. Country[1]	Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices[2]
Bosnia and Herzegovina	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Bosnia and Herzegovina states that as of May 20, 2022, Bosnia and Herzegovina maintains restrictions on the transferability of balances and interest accrued on frozen foreign-currency deposits, subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII. (Country Report No. 22/167)
Brazil	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Brazil states that, as of August 20, 2021, the tax on financial transactions (Imposto sobre Operações Financeiras–IOF) of 6.38% on exchange transactions carried out through credit card, debit card, and traveler's checks (including cash withdrawals) by companies to fulfill their payment obligations for purchases of goods and services abroad by their customers gives rise to a MCP subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Sections 2(a) and 3. In January 2008, the IOF for these exchange transactions was raised to 2.38% and then further increased to 6.38% in March 2011. The scope of operations was expanded to other foreign exchange transactions in addition to credit cards in December 2013. (Country Report No. 21/217)
Burundi	The IMF staff report for the Article IV Consultation with Burundi states that as of July 7, 2022, Burundi continues to maintain a MCP that is inconsistent with Article VIII, Section 3: The exchange rate used for government transactions (the official rate) may differ by more than 2% from market exchange rates, and there is no mechanism to prevent such a deviation. (Country Report No. 22/257)
Congo, Democratic Republic of the	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation, Second Review Under the Extended Credit Facility Arrangement, Request for Modifications of Performance Criteria, and Financing Assurances Review with the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), states that as of, June 15, 2022, the DRC maintains one exchange rate restriction subject to IMF approval arising from an outstanding net debt position against other contracting members under the inoperative regional payments' agreement with the CEPGL. (Country Report No. 22/210)
Ecuador	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation, Second and Third Reviews under the Extended Arrangement under the Extended Fund Facility, Request for a Waiver of Nonobservance of Performance Criterion, and Financing Assurances Review for Ecuador states that, as of September 20, 2021, Ecuador maintained an exchange restriction subject to IMF approval arising from a 5% tax on transfers for the making of payments and transfers abroad on current international transactions. There are a number of exemptions from this tax. In September 2021, the government enacted an Executive Decree lowering the tax rate to zero for foreign airline companies operating in Ecuador, which will enter into force on its publication in the official gazette. In addition, the SUCRE (Sistema Unitario de Compensación Regional de Pagos) regional payments arrangement also gives rise to an exchange restriction subject to IMF approval since the period for settlement under the bilateral payment arrangement exceeds three months. (Country Report No. 21/228)
Ethiopia	The IMF staff report for the 2019 Article IV Consultation with Ethiopia states that, as of December 11, 2019, Ethiopia maintained four restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions, which relate to: (1) the tax certification requirement for repatriation of dividend and other investment income; (2) restrictions on repayment of legal external loans and suppliers of foreign partners credits; (3) the prioritization and rationing of foreign exchange to certain imports of goods and services, debt payments and invisibles, and (4) the requirement to provide a clearance certificate from the National Bank of Ethiopia (NBE) to obtain import permits. These restrictions are inconsistent with Article VIII, Section 2(a), of the IMF's Articles of Agreement. (Country Report No. 20/29)
Fiji	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Fiji states that, as of November 8, 2021, exchange restrictions subject to Article VIII arise from the Fiji Revenue and Customs Authority tax certification requirements on the transfer abroad of profits and dividends, on the proceeds of airline ticket sales, and on the making of external debt and maintenance payments and from limits on large payments (for example, oil imports and dividends repatriation of foreign banks). The authorities further tightened the controls for payments of international transactions in April 2020, at the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic by either reducing the delegated limits to commercial banks or replacing these limits with the Reserve Bank of Fiji (RBF) discretionary approval requirement on large payments. (Country Report No. 21/257)
Gabon	The IMF staff report for 2019 Article IV Consultation Fourth and Fifth Reviews under the Extended Arrangement under the Extended Fund Facility, and Request for Waiver of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, and Rephasing of the Remaining Purchases with Gabon states that, as of December 4, 2019, Gabon maintained a 1.5% tax on wire transfers abroad that is not consistent with Gabon's obligations under Article VIII, Section 2(a) of the Articles of Agreement. The proceeds of this tax are used to fund Gabon's health insurance scheme. (Country Report No. 19/389)
Ghana	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Ghana states that as of July 1, 2021, Ghana maintained one exchange restriction and a MCP subject to IMF approval. The exchange restriction arises from the limitation/prohibition on purchasing and transferring foreign exchange for import transactions by importers that have not submitted to the commercial bank customs entry forms for any past foreign exchange transactions related to imports and that are unrelated to the underlying transaction. An MCP also arises, because the Bank of Ghana (BOG) requires the use of its internal rate (that is, the previous day's weighted average interbank exchange rate) for government transactions and the surrender of foreign exchange proceeds from cocoa exports funded through the cocoa syndicated loan without having a mechanism in place to ensure that, at the time of the transaction, this exchange rate does not differ from the rate prevailing in the market rate (that is, the interbank exchange rate) and the rates used by banks in their transactions with their customers by more than 2%. (Country Report No. 21/165)
Guinea	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation and Request for Disbursement Under the Rapid Credit Facility with Guinea states that, as of December 8, 2022, the foreign exchange system gives rise to an MCP because the reference rate can potentially deviate by more than 2% from the commercial banks' purchase and sales rates on a given day. (Country Report No. 23/43)

Country[1]	Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices[2]
Honduras	The IMF staff report for the Fourth Reviews under the Stand-by Arrangement and the Arrangement under the Standby Credit Facility, Requests for Augmentation of Access, Extension and Rephasing of the Arrangements, and Waivers of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria with Honduras states that, as of August 30, 2021, Honduras maintained two MCPs. The MCPs relate to the use of the previous days' official exchange rates in certain foreign exchange transactions (which could differ by more than 2% from the official rate in force and the interbank rate on a given day), and the fact that there is no mechanism to prevent a spread of more than 2% between the official exchange rate and the exchange rates resulting from a CB foreign exchange auction. (Country Report No. 21/207)
India	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with India states that, as of November 7, 2022, India maintains the following restrictions on the making of payments and transfers for current international transactions, which are subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a):restrictions related to the non-transferability of balances under the India-Russia debt agreement; restrictions arising from unsettled balances under inoperative bilateral payments arrangements with two Eastern European countries; and a restriction on the transfer of amortization payments on loans by nonresident relatives. (Country Report No. 22/386)
Iran, Islamic Republic of	The IMF staff report for the 2018 Article IV Consultation with Islamic Republic of Iran states that, as of March 7, 2018, Iran maintained MCPs and an exchange restriction subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Sections 2(a) and 3: (1) An MCP and an exchange restriction arise from the establishment of an official exchange rate for use in some exchange transactions, which in practice differs by more than 2% from the rate used by foreign exchange bureaus. (2) An MCP arises from the differences of more than 2% between the current official and exchange bureaus rates and the preferential rates for certain imports for which foreign exchange commitments were made through LCs opened prior to March 21, 2002, under the previous multiple exchange rate system. (3) An MCP arises from the differences of more than 2% between the current official and exchange bureaus rates and the preferential rates for certain imports for which foreign exchange payment commitments were made through LCs or bank drafts prior to July 24, 2012. (Country Report No. 18/93)
Iraq	The IMF staff report for the 2020 Article IV Consultation with Iraq states that, as of January 22, 2021, Iraq continues to avail itself of the transitional arrangements under Article XIV, Section 2 but no longer maintains any exchange restrictions or MCPs subject to Article XIV, Section 2, and currently maintains one MCP subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 3. The MCP arises from the lack of a mechanism to ensure that the exchange rate at the Central Bank of Iraq (CBI) foreign exchange window and the market rates (retail exchange rates of commercial banks and exchange bureaus for the sale of foreign currency from sources other than the CBI foreign exchange window) do not deviate from each other by more than 2%. (Country Report No. 21/38)
Jamaica	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Jamaica states that, as of January 25, 2022, Jamaica maintains a multiple currency practice, subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 3 of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, due to the absence of a mechanism to prevent the exchange rates used for the resale of foreign exchange auction funds (capped with a specified spread) by participants and the exchange rates at which such participants sell foreign exchange other than from the foreign exchange auction funds, from deviating by more than 2%. (Country Report No. 22/43)
Kyrgyz Republic	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with the Kyrgyz Republic states that, as of May 18, 2021, the Kyrgyz Republic maintained an MCP arising from the use of the official exchange rate for government transactions. The official rate may differ by more than 2% from market rates because it is based on the average transaction weighted rate of the preceding day. (Country Report No. 21/174)
Lesotho	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Lesotho, states that, as of May 16, 2022, Lesotho maintains one exchange restriction arising from single discretionary allowances of LSL 1 million an individual a calendar year, for residents over 18, and of LSL 200,000 on the same basis for residents under 18. Foreign exchange transactions beyond these limits need Central Bank of Lesotho approval. (Country Report No. 22/161)
Maldives	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Maldives, states that, as of November 23, 2022, Maldives has previously been found to maintain an MCP resulting from the deviation by more than 2 percent between the prevailing market exchange rates and the parallel market exchange rates, and an exchange restriction relating to the additional cost for market participants to obtain foreign exchange from the parallel market. Under the IMF's revised MCP policy adopted on July 1, 2022, MCPs resulting from the exchange rate spreads arising in illegal parallel markets are considered eliminated as of the approval date of the policy since these markets are legally prohibited and thus not the result of official action. Information received by staff recently confirmed that the parallel market in the Maldives is illegal under the national law, and therefore, the MCP arising from a spread between the parallel market and prevailing market exchange rates in the Maldives has been eliminated effective July 1, 2022. Further, the exchange restriction in connection with the additional cost for obtaining foreign exchange in the parallel market due to this spread has also been eliminated effective July 1, 2022. At the same time, the Maldives continues to maintain an exchange restriction arising from the Maldives Monetary Authority's rationing of its supply of foreign exchange to commercial banks, which also resulted in a channeling of foreign exchange for current international transactions to the illegal parallel market. In that regard, the authorities should continue undertaking reasonable efforts to eliminate the spread with the parallel market. In addition, the Maldives continues to maintain an MCP resulting from the lack of a mechanism to prevent the spread between the official exchange rate used by the Maldives Monetary Authority for government transactions and the prevailing market exchange rate from deviating by more than 2 percent. (Country Report No. 23/366)

Country[1]	Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices[2]
Nepal	The IMF staff report for the 2020 Article IV Consultation with Nepal states that as of February 27, 2020, the Industrial Enterprises Act places a 75% limit on the conversion and transfer to foreign currency of salaries of nonresidents from countries where convertible currency is in circulation. Because the limit applies to amounts that may be less than net salaries, it gives rise to an exchange restriction under Article VIII. (Country Report No. 20/96)
Nicaragua	The IMF staff report for the 2019 Article IV Consultation with Nicaragua states that, as of January 30, 2020, staff identified an exchange restriction arising from Nicaragua's participation in the SUCRE (Sistema Unitario de Compensación Regional de Pagos) regional payments arrangement. SUCRE gives rise to an exchange restriction because the period for settlement under this regional payment arrangement exceeds three months. See Decision No. 10749-(94/67). Under the SUCRE, Nicaragua made four commercial transactions between 2013 and 2015, and since 2015 no transactions have been made. (Country Report No. 20/59).
Nigeria	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Nigeria states that, as of December 14, 2021, Nigeria maintained the following exchange restrictions subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a) of the IMF's Articles of Agreement: (1) an exchange restriction arising from the prohibition to access foreign exchange at the Nigerian foreign exchange markets for the payment of imports of 42 categories of items; (2) an exchange restriction arising from the rationing of foreign exchange by the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) in different foreign exchange windows, and its allocation based on the CBN's determination of priority categories of transactions; and (3) an exchange restriction arising from existing limits on the amounts of foreign exchange available when traveling abroad (business travel allowance/personal travel allowances), which cannot be exceeded even on verification of the bona fide nature of the transaction. In addition, Nigeria maintains the following MCPs subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 3 of the IMF's Articles of Agreement: (1) an MCP arising from the practice of the CBN that results in the establishment of an exchange rate for use in official (government) transactions and some other transactions, which may differ by more than 2% from the rate used by commercial banks in other CBN foreign exchange windows (Secondary Market Intervention Sale (SMIS), Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs), Investors' and Exporters' Foreign Exchange (IEFX), and Invisibles); (2) an MCP arising from the large spread between exchange rates used by the CBN in its foreign exchange windows and the rates in the parallel market, caused by the CBN's limitation on the availability of foreign exchange which channels current international transactions to such market; and (3) an MCP arising from the potential spread of more than 2% in the exchange rates at which the CBN sells foreign exchange to successful auction bidders in the SMIS window. (Country Report No. 2022/033).
Pakistan	The IMF staff report for the Seventh, and Eighth Reviews of the Extended Arrangement under the Extended Fund Facility, Requests for Waivers of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, and for Extension, Augmentation, and Rephasing of Access with Pakistan states that as of August 16, 2022, Pakistan introduced new exchange restriction and import restriction for balance of payments purposes; and modified one existing exchange restriction and the MCP. Specifically, in early April 2022, the authorities extended the set of items subject to a 100% cash margin requirement (CMR) on imports by 177 items, bringing the share of items covered by CMRs to about 20% of total import values and missing the relevant performance criteria on non-intensification of exchange restrictions and on non-modification of MCPs. In addition, the authorities imposed a requirement to seek payment authorization from the State Bank of Pakistan (SBP) before initiating transactions for importing certain goods, with approval granted in a discretionary manner, thereby violating the performance criterion on the non-imposition of exchange restrictions. The authorities have partially repealed the import ban in August 2022 (leaving in place the ban on cars, mobile phones, and household appliances), and are committed to eliminate the requirement for import payment authorization at end-August 2022, depending on market conditions. Meanwhile, in early August 2022, CMRs were reduced on terms of payment above 90 days and CMRs introduced in April are set to lapse in December 2022. Finally, Pakistan also continues to maintain an exchange restriction resulting from the limitation on advance payments for imports against LCs and advance payments up to the certain amount per invoice (without LCs) for the import of eligible items (imposed in 2018). (Country Report No. 22/288)
Papua New Guinea	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV and the Staff Monitored Program with Papua New Guinea states that as of May 25, 2022, Papua New Guinea maintains the following exchange restrictions subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a) of the IMF's Articles of Agreement arising from: (1) the requirement to obtain a tax clearance certificate (TCC) evidencing the payment of all taxes prior to making payments or transfers for certain current international transactions; and (2) the rationing of foreign exchange, which results in undue delays and arrears in current international payments. Papua New Guinea also maintains the following MCPs subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 3: an MCP arising from the potential spread deviation of more than 2% between the rates set by the Bank of Papua New Guinea (BPNG) for its foreign exchange transactions with the government and embassies, and the rates used by authorized foreign exchange dealers (AFEDs) in transactions with their clients and an MCP arising from the spread of more than 2% between the rates set by the BPNG for its foreign exchange allocations to AFEDs and the rates used by AFEDs in transactions with their clients. (Country Report No. 22/305, Country Report No. 20/95)
São Tomé and Príncipe	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation; Fourth Review Under the Extended Credit Facility Arrangement, Request for Waivers for Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, Modification of Performance Criteria and Financing Assurances Review with São Tomé and Príncipe states that as of March 14, 2022, São Tomé and Príncipe continues to avail itself of the transitional arrangements under Article XIV, but it does not maintain restrictions under Article XIV. However, it maintains restrictions subject to IMF approval under Article VIII. One exchange restriction regarding limitations on the transferability of net income from investment arises from Article 3(g) and Article 18 of the Investment Code (Law No. 19/2016). This restriction results from the requirement that taxes and other obligations to the government have to be paid/fulfilled as a condition for transfer, to the extent the requirement includes the payment of taxes and the fulfillment of obligations unrelated to the net income to be transferred. The second exchange restriction arises from limitations on the availability of foreign exchange through rationing of foreign exchange by Banco Central São Tomé and Príncipe. This exchange restriction also gives rise to an MCP as the rationing has channeled bona fide current transactions to the parallel market where the exchange rate is at a spread of more than 2 percent from the exchange rate in the formal market. (Country Report No. 2022/095)

	The IMF staff report for the Fifth Review Under the Extended Credit Facility Arrangement Request for Waiver of Nonobservance of Performance Criterion and Financing Assurances Review with São Tomé and Príncipe states that as of August 8, 2022, São Tomé and Príncipe maintained measures that give rise to exchange restrictions under Article VIII. Based on available information that the parallel foreign exchange market in São Tomé and Príncipe is illegal, the existing MCP is therefore eliminated based on the transitional arrangements of the approved revised MCP policy. This change reflects the Board's adoption of a revised MCP policy effective July 1, 2022. While the policy will only become effective nine months from the date of approval of the revised policy, under transitional arrangements, some elements became effective immediately on the approval date, including that MCPs no longer arise from exchange rate spreads arising in illegal parallel markets. Existing MCPs based on certain types of official action which will no longer be covered under the revised MCP policy will be considered eliminated as of the approval date of the revised policy. (Country Report No. 22/306)
Serbia	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation and Request for a 30-Month Policy Coordination Instrument with Serbia states that, as of June 3, 2021, Serbia maintained a system free of restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions, except with respect to blocked pre-1991 foreign currency savings deposits (IMF Country Report No. 02/105). (Country Report No. 21/132)
Sierra Leone	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation and Fifth Review under the Extended Credit Facility Arrangement, Requests for Waivers of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, Modifications of Performance Criteria, and Financing Assurance Review with Sierra Leone states that as of June 13, 2022, Sierra Leone maintains two MCPs, subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 3 of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, because of (1) the use of the Bank of Sierra Leone (BSL) rate, which is not considered a prevailing market rate, because of the manner of its computation (it is calculated weekly and computed based on transactions over the previous five business days), and the BSL rate has exceeded the prevailing market rate by more than 2% at certain points in time, and (2) the use of an exchange rate for transactions under certain facilities, which is not considered a prevailing market exchange rate, as it is calculated based on commercial banks' weighted average exchange rates on the previous day, and there is no mechanism in place to ensure that the spread between this rate and the prevailing market rate at the time of the transactions does not exceed 2%. Sierra Leone maintains an exchange restriction, subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Section 2(a) of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, arising from the prioritization of foreign exchange through various BSL facilities, which results in a limitation on the availability of foreign exchange for payments of current international transactions, where there is a shortage of foreign exchange in the market. (Country Report No. 22/259)
South Sudan	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation and Second Review Under the Staff-Monitored Program with South Sudan states that as of July 19, 2022, South Sudan maintains one exchange restriction under the transitional arrangements of Article XIV. The exchange restriction arises from imposing absolute ceilings on the availability of foreign exchange for certain invisible transactions (travel, remittances for living expenses of students and families residing abroad, and transfers of salaries by foreign workers). South Sudan also maintains one exchange restriction subject to IMF approval under Article VIII. The exchange restriction arises because of prioritization of foreign exchange allocation by the Bank of South Sudan (BSS) for external government payments and payments for certain essential commodities. A few MCPs and an exchange restriction have been eliminated. At the time of the 2019 Article IV Consultation, South Sudan maintained exchange restrictions and a MCP under the transitional arrangements of Article XIV and also maintained MCPs and an exchange restriction under Article VIII. The IMF adopted a revised policy on MCPs effective July 1, 2022. While the revised MCP policy enters into force nine months from its date of approval, under transitional arrangements, two of South Sudan's MCPs maintained under Article VIII and Article XIV, respectively, arising from spreads with the parallel market have been eliminated given that the parallel market in South Sudan is illegal. An exchange restriction under Article XIV, in connection with the extra burden arising from the spread between the parallel market exchange rate and the formal commercial exchange market rate, has also been eliminated. In addition, as the official (indicative) rate has been discontinued and replaced with the reference rate, the MCP arising from spreads between the official (indicative) rate and the commercial banks' (market) rate has also been eliminated. All other exchange measures maintained by South Sudan remain unchanged. (Country Report No. 22/266)
Sri Lanka	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Sri Lanka states that as of February 10, 2022, Sri Lanka maintains an MCP subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Section 3. It arises from a temporary incentive scheme for inward worker remittances under which the authorities offer an additional incentive over the exchange rates used by banks for such remittances, with the deviation between the more favorable (effective) exchange rate used for qualifying inward workers remittances and the exchange rate used for other inward remittances being more than 2%. (Country Report No. 22/91)
Sudan	The IMF staff report for the Request for a 39-Month Arrangement Under the Extended Credit Facility with Sudan states that, as of June 21, 2021, Sudan continues to maintain the measures subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Sections 2 (a) and 3 as set forth in the staff report for the 2019 Article IV Consultation. Sudan maintained the following measures subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Sections 2 (a) and 3: (1) An exchange restriction arising from the government's limitations on the availability of foreign exchange and the allocation of foreign exchange to certain priority items; (2) an MCP and exchange restriction arising from the establishment of an official exchange rate (the Central Bank of Sudan (CBOS) rate) for use in all government exchange transactions which in practice differs by more than 2% from the rate used by commercial banks; (3) an MCP and exchange restriction arising from large spreads between the CBOS rate and the parallel market exchange rate because of the CBOS' limitation on the availability of foreign exchange which channels current international transactions to the parallel market; and (4) an exchange restriction and a MCP arising from the imposition by the government of a cash margin requirement for most imports (Country Report No. 20/72). Country[1]	Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices[2]
Syria	The IMF staff report for the 2009 Article IV Consultation with Syria states that, as of February 12, 2010, Syria continued to maintain, under Article XIV, restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions, including administrative allocation of foreign exchange. Syria also maintained exchange measures that are subject to IMF approval under Article VIII: (1) prohibition against purchases by private parties of foreign exchange from the banking system for some current international transactions; (2) an MCP resulting from divergences of more than 2% between the official exchange rate and officially recognized market exchange rates; (3) a non-interest-bearing advance import deposit requirement of 75%–100% for public sector imports; and (4) an exchange restriction arising from the net debt under inoperative bilateral payments arrangements with the Islamic Republic of Iran and Sri Lanka. (Country Report No. 10/86)
Tajikistan	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Tajikistan states that, as of January 3, 2022, the Republic of Tajikistan maintains one exchange restriction and two multiple currency practices subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, Sections 2(a) and 3, of the IMF's Articles of Agreement. Foreign exchange shortages, evidenced by market participants' reports of undue delays in obtaining foreign exchange and external payment arrears, persist in the commercial foreign exchange market as a result of the setting of exchange rates by commercial banks used in foreign exchange transactions, because of informal guidance by the National Bank of Tajikistan, which do not reflect market conditions. Because of this, not all demand for bona fide foreign exchange for current international transactions is satisfied, giving rise to an exchange restriction. One multiple currency practice arises because of the absence of a mechanism to prevent a potential deviation of more than 2% between: (1) the prevailing market exchange rate and (2) the official exchange rate, which is required to be used for converting domestic currency (somoni) to foreign currency, and vice-versa, between accounts of individuals and legal entities opened within the same commercial bank. The second multiple currency practice arises because of the absence of a mechanism to prevent a potential deviation of more than 2% between: (1) the somoni-Russian ruble exchange rate (calculated as a cross-rate using the official exchange rate of the USD to somoni), which is required to be used for mandatory ruble surrender transactions and for the purchase/sale in the interbank market of rubles derived from the mandatory surrender and (2) the market exchange rate banks may use for purchase/sale of Russian rubles derived from other sources. (Country Report No. 22/53)
Trinidad and Tobago	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation with Trinidad and Tobago states that, as of January 21, 2022, Trinidad and Tobago maintains an exchange restriction and two MCPs subject to the IMF's approval under Article VIII, Sections 2(a) and 3. The exchange restriction arises from the authorities' restriction of the exchange rate (that is, by restricting the maximum market buy and sell rates, and prohibiting foreign exchange transactions beyond the maximum rates), while not providing enough foreign exchange (that is, through the Central Bank of Trinidad and Tobago's (CBTT's) foreign exchange interventions) to meet all demand for current transactions at that rate. The CBTT also limits sales of its foreign exchange intervention funds to meeting only "trade-related" demand, which do not include non-trade transactions that are, however, current international transactions as defined under Article XXX(d) of the IMF's Articles of Agreement and encourages ADs to similarly prioritize sales of foreign exchange obtained from other sources. Furthermore, the authorities prioritize provision of foreign exchange to certain manufacturers and importers of necessities (foods and medicines) through special foreign exchange facilities within the EximBank. These actions result in undue delays in accessing foreign exchange to make payments or transfers for current international transactions and external payment arrears. The two MCPs arise from the absence of a mechanism to prevent the potential deviation of more than 2% at any given time among several effective exchange rates regulated by the authorities, for spot exchange transactions; namely, (1) the potential 2% deviation between, (a) on the one hand, the CBTT's intervention rate and the ADs' sell rates (the maximum of which is anchored on the intervention rate plus fixed margins), and (b) on the other hand, the ADs' buy rates (the maximum of which is limited at the previous day's mid-rate); and (2) The potential 2% deviation between, (a) on the one hand, the buy and sell rates for foreign exchange transactions between the CBTT and the government, and (b) on the other hand, the ADs' sell rates. (Country Report No. 22/73)
Ukraine	The IMF staff report for the First Review under the Stand-By Arrangement, Requests for Extension and Rephasing of Access of the Arrangement, Waivers of Nonobservance of a Performance Criterion, Financing Assurances Review, and Monetary Policy Consultation with Ukraine states that, as of November 8, 2021, Ukraine continues to maintain one exchange restriction and two MCPs, but a roadmap is in place to gradually phase them out. The exchange restriction arises from limits on the availability of foreign exchange for certain non-trade current international transactions (the limit on individuals' and corporates' investments abroad may capture some current transactions). The MCPs arise from: (1) the use of multiple price foreign exchange auctions conducted by the National Bank of Ukraine (NBU) without a mechanism to prevent a spread deviation of more than 2% between the auction and market exchange rates and (2) the use of the official exchange rate for exchange transactions with the government without a mechanism to prevent a spread deviation of more than 2% between the official exchange rate and market exchange rates. (Country Report No. 21/250)
Zambia	The IMF staff report for the 2019 Article IV Consultation with Zambia, states that as of July 11, 2019, Zambia maintained an exchange restriction, which is subject to IMF approval under Article VIII, arising from limitations imposed by the government on access to foreign exchange for the making of payments and transfers for current international transactions, which is evidenced by the existence of external payments arrears accumulated prior to October 4, 1985. (Country Report No. 19/263)
Zimbabwe	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Zimbabwe states that as of March 2, 2022, Zimbabwe maintains several exchange restrictions and MCPs, inconsistent with Article VIII, Sections 2(a), and 3, in particular: (1) The rationing of foreign exchange sales through weekly Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe (RBZ) auctions and earmarking of foreign exchange to finance letters of credit for certain imports constitute exchange restrictions as these measures limit the availability and use of foreign exchange for payments and transfers for current international transactions. (2) The RBZ's sale of foreign exchange to successful bidders during weekly auctions at exchange rates that may differ by more than 2% from each other and from exchange rates being used for official transactions, transactions to fulfill the foreign exchange surrender requirement, or market transactions constitute an MCP.

Country[1]	Exchange Restrictions and/or Multiple Currency Practices[2]
	(3) The use of the official rate for official transactions and transactions made to fulfill the surrender requirement, while this rate may be different by more than 2% from the market exchange rate also constitutes another MCP. Zimbabwe has also a longstanding exchange restriction subject to IMF jurisdiction arising from unsettled balances under an inoperative bilateral payment agreement with Malaysia. [1] List those members and territories that maintain exchange restrictions and/or MCPs from the 190 member countries and the following territories—Aruba, Curaçao, and Sint Maarten (all in the Kingdom of the Netherlands: information for Curaçao and Sint Maarten is reported together as they have a common central bank) and Hong Kong SAR and Macao SAR (both in People's Republic of China)—that are covered in the IMF, AREAER database.

[2] The measures described in this table are quoted from IMF staff reports issued as of December 31, 2022, and may have changed subsequent to the date they were reported. The table does not include countries maintaining exchange restrictions and/or MCPs whose IMF staff reports are unpublished, unless the authorities have consented to publication.

Regulatory Framework for Foreign Exchange Transactions

This section surveys the measures reported by members with respect to the regulatory framework for foreign exchange transactions from January 2022 through December 2023.[46] The measures are divided into five major categories: trade-related measures, current invisible transactions and transfers, account transactions, capital controls, and provisions specific to commercial banks and institutional investors.

Trade-Related Measures

Members overall reported 420 actions of trade-related changes from January 2022 to December 2023, compared with an average of 229 measures in the previous three reporting periods. Easing measures increased then decreased from 2022–23. More than half of total measures were easing measures (224), most likely taken by member countries due to changes in economic and financial conditions. Tightening measures also increased then decreased in 2022–23, in part due to reversals of temporary easing related to tightening global economic and financial conditions.

In 2022, the total number of changes in import- and export-related exchange and trade controls increased to 275, of which 140 were easing (up from 108 in 2021—and more than half the number of all trade-related changes reported that year) (Figure 5, panel 1). The remaining measures included 108 tightening and 27 neutral measures. Although the number of countries implementing restrictive measures continued to rise from numbers reported in 2021 (to 108 in 2022), that number was eclipsed by the increase in countries taking easing measures (140) (Figure 5, panel 2).

In 2022–23, EMDEs reported an average of 9.29 measures per member, followed by low-income developing countries with 3.52 measures per member and advanced economies with just 2.14 measures per member. EMDEs saw a significant increase in average measures per member from previous years, while advanced economies and low-income developing economies saw a slight decrease.

Imports and Import Payments

Thirty-eight economies reported a total of 177 measures related to imports and import payments in 2022, compared to 40 economies reporting 145 measures in 2021 (Figure 6, panel 1). This increase in the number of measures can be explained by a rise in both easing (to 91 in 2022 from 73 in 2021) and tightening measures (to 67 in 2022 from 53 in 2021). Easing measures increased more in contrast to the drop in such measures in 2021. Following a decrease in previous years, there has a been a slight increase in tightening and neutral measures in 2022–23. EMDEs implemented the largest number of easing actions, but they also reported the highest proportion of tightening measures—compared to advanced economies, which tightened much more sparingly.

[46] Data for 2023 is partial: virtually all members report information as of June 30, 2023; about 18 percent of members' reporting periods end during the third quarter of 2023, and about the same number of members' reporting periods end during the fourth quarter of 2023.

The number of countries implementing measures rose dramatically in 2022, and this trend appears to have stayed in 2023, with EMDEs dominating.

A total of 25 of the 38 countries enacting import-related measures took at least one liberalizing action in 2022, with a total of 91 easing measures reported. Among these countries, Argentina implemented the largest number of liberalization measures (17), followed by Sri Lanka (8), Ecuador (8), Colombia (5), El Salvador (5), Russia (5), and Pakistan (4).

Argentina underwent significant efforts to mobilize external financing and external sector activity. Argentina gradually relaxed measures during 2022, with a majority related to foreign exchange market access—under certain conditions, for example, importers no longer required prior approval from the Central Bank of Argentina to make import payments related to the cancellation of debts, payments on demand or commercial debts, or for payments with pending customs entry. Other measures were related to minimum financing requirements, where exemptions for the importation of certain types of goods were included in existing measures. Some of these relaxations by Argentina in part reflect the reversal of earlier tightening measures taken to deal with their weak balance-of-payments situations and pressures on its currency. Facing similar issues in 2022, Sri Lanka fluctuated between tightening and easing measures to counter the pressures on its balance of payments. Their easing measures related mainly to updating the importing schedule or removing items from the banned list.

Ecuador primarily changed measures related to taxes collected through the exchange system and other nontariff measures, where the capital outflow tax was gradually reduced, and various items were made easier to import. Colombia and El Salvador both liberalized import taxes and tariffs. Colombia made temporary reductions on tariffs related to agricultural inputs, consumer goods, and on the taxable base of customs duties. El Salvador reduced tariffs for specific agricultural and commodities to combat inflation, as well as reduced import duties. Russia removed various 30 percent limits on advance payments on certain foreign trade contracts and nonresident banks. Russia also removed the requirement to repatriate funds paid to nonresidents in the form of advance payment for non-imported goods and made it so that residents were not required to submit documents to a bank related to the performance of foreign exchange transactions under any contracts with nonresidents if the amount of obligations did not exceed 600,000 rubles. Facing external sector vulnerabilities, Pakistan eliminated the requirement of advance tax collected on the importation of various machinery and equipment, and eliminated requirements for obtaining 100 percent of cash margins where credit terms of imports are more than 90 days.

Most of the remaining easing measures were undertaken by 18 countries. For instance, advance payment requirement were eased (Morocco, Solomon Islands, Ukraine), conditions on the use of letters of credits (LCs) were relaxed (Bangladesh, Egypt [eased in December 2022 following a tightening in February 2022; see following discussion]), requirement for import licenses were eliminated for certain products (Armenia, Belgium, Myanmar [following a previous tightening; see following discussion]), tariffs were reduced or exempted related to agricultural products (Costa Rica, Mexico, Romania), temporary trade liberalization on imports from Moldova as a result of the war in Ukraine (Romania, Spain), and reductions in tariffs as a result of bilateral and regional trade agreements (Armenia, Australia).

A total of 23 countries implemented 67 tightening measures in 2022, which is a slight increase from 2021 (53). Eleven of these measures were put into place by Bangladesh, with the second highest each coming from Argentina and Sri Lanka (9), followed by Pakistan (6), and finally Ukraine (4). In response to balance-of-payment pressures, Bangladesh tightened the usance period for imports of industrial raw materials including back-to-back imports and imports of agricultural implements and chemical fertilizers under supplier/buyer credit up to 180 days (down from 270 days previously). On minimum financing requirements and advance import deposits, banks must ensure a minimum of 25 percent cash margin on imports except for certain essential products, and the margin for opening import LCs was increased to a minimum of 100 percent (previously 75 percent) for luxury products and 75 percent (previously 50 percent) for other products except for certain essential products. Finally, facilities related to COVID-19 ended as of the beginning of 2022.

In Argentina, minimum financing requirements were tightened (for example, an import monitoring system was introduced, which established limits for access to the foreign exchange market for import payments for different categories of goods, and these limits were adjusted so that the limit would be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of each category accumulated up to the month in question). Additionally, customers must certify they had not acquired and will not acquire Argentine certificates of deposit representing foreign shares, they had not acquired and will not acquire securities representing private debt issued in foreign jurisdictions, and they had not delivered and will not deliver funds in local currency or other local assets. Sri Lanka increased the value-added tax rate on the supply of financial services on financial institutions to 18 percent from 15 percent and the value-added tax rate on import and supply of goods and services gradually to 15 percent from 8 percent. Additionally, the value-added tax registration threshold was reduced to Rs80 million from Rs300 million. Sri Lanka also instituted a 100 percent cash margin requirement when importing selected goods, while also updating the list of items that require a licensing requirement. To support the balance-of-payments position and also reduce foreign currency outflows, Pakistan imposed a cash margin requirement on additional 177 items, announced that authorized dealers must seek prior permission from the Foreign Exchange Operations Department relating to payments before initiating transactions for imports of selected items, added 33 items deemed luxury and nonessential to the negative list, and increased import taxes and tariffs on certain items. Ukraine temporarily prohibited banks from conducting settlements on documentary and reserve credits/guarantees/counter-guarantees that were opened (confirmed, issued) after February 24, 2022. Additionally, Ukraine established that foreign currency purchased by a resident (other than banks) as of July 11, 2022, must be used within no more than two business days for the purposes indicated when purchasing the foreign currency, and introduced temporary restrictions on transactions to pay for imported goods. Ukraine also temporarily reduced the settlement deadlines for export and import transactions performed after April 5, 2022.

Most of the remaining tightening measures were undertaken by 18 countries. For example, requirements for import licenses for all or certain products were imposed (Belarus, Iran, Myanmar), certain goods were added to the negative list (Australia, Denmark), conditions on the use of LCs were tightened (Egypt, Iran), other nontariff measures related to public procurement issues (Hungary) and excise taxes on soft drinks were established (Kyrgyz Republic), and advance payment requirements were established (Russia).

Partial data for 2023 suggest that the trend appears to be similar for both liberalization and tightening measures as in 2022. Compared to 2022, thus far, there was a decrease in easing and tightening measures, at 56 and 30 measures, respectively. As was the case in 2022, easing measures dominated tightening measures. Members with the most easing measures are Argentina (12), Ecuador (6), and Bangladesh, Samoa, and Sri Lanka (4). For example, at the end of 2023, the new government in Argentina eased the rules on access to foreign exchange for the processing of import payments by eliminating any requirements in connection with obtaining authorizations through the Argentine Republic Import System (SIRA) and the Single Foreign Trade Account Certificate requirement and by lowering the minimum periods for access to the foreign exchange market to process import payments. In addition, to make the payments in connection with importers' accumulated stock of commercial debt more predictable, the Central Bank of Argentina announced the conditions for new instruments comprising three series of Bonds for the Reconstruction of a Free Argentina (BOPREAL). These bonds are being offered as a mechanism to channel foreign exchange demand from importers that have commercial debts in connection with operations involving customs registration or services effectively provided up to December 12, 2023. Ecuador gradually reduced the capital outflow tax to 3.5 percent with a series of measures, reduced 50 percent of the tariff rate for 5,801 transport vehicles, and temporarily reduced the tariff rate of rice to 0 percent due to a drop in rice production. Bangladesh increased the usance period of industrial materials, agricultural implements, and chemical fertilizers to 360 days for six months and allowed bankers to set margin requirements for LCs on imports of vehicle spare parts, tires, and other related products. Samoa reduced import duty rates of fruits such as apples, pears, and grapes to 0 percent, macadamia and wall nuts were reduced to 15 percent, and non-locally produced vegetables such as broccoli, asparagus, cauliflower, and garlic were reduced to 10 percent. Sri Lanka removed the 100 percent cash margin requirement because of subsiding balance-of-payment pressures as well as further updated the schedule of importing items toward easing import restrictions.

Most of the remaining easing measures were undertaken by 16 countries. For example, advance import deposits were lifted (Nepal, Pakistan), import taxes and tariffs were reduced or eliminated (Australia, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, India, Malaysia, Mexico, Mozambique, Philippines, Uzbekistan, Zambia), negative lists were updated (Denmark), and use of credit cards for the purpose of financing imports of materials was established (Libya).

Countries with the most tightening measures in 2023 are Argentina (5), Colombia (4), and Hungary, Mexico, and Türkiye (3). For instance, Argentina required institutions to have an affidavit from a customer to ensure that the amount of financing requested was within the monthly limit as specified in the regulation. Colombia added products related to mercury to the negative list, no longer allowed exclusion of freight from the tax base, and imposed an ad valorem tariff of 40 percent on certain imports originating from a most favored nation country. Hungary added and extended restrictive measures against Belarus and Russia, Mexico implemented and ad valorem tax of 50 percent to white corn imports and removed exemptions to wheat and spelt, and Türkiye added or restored customs duties to various agricultural imports such as red lentils, sunflower and safflower seeds, and wheat.

Most of the remaining tightening measures were undertaken by nine countries. New tariffs and import taxes were put into place (Moldova, Pakistan, Russia, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka), licenses with quotas were established (Ecuador), all imports again require licenses (Myanmar), and open general licenses were imposed (Australia).

Exports and Export Proceeds

There were 149 changes related to exports and export proceeds from January 2022 through December 2023, with easing measures (77) outnumbering tightening measures (63) and only a small number of neutral changes (9). Measures on repatriation requirements were the most numerous (39), followed by those on export licenses with quotas (32) and surrender to authorized dealers (22). However, the share of easing and tightening measures was quite different in 2022 and 2023 than in 2021: liberalizing measures (49) dominated tightening measures (41) in 2022. Partial year data suggest that the trend continued in 2023: there were 28 changes liberalizing exports and export payments; tightening measures were nearly half than 2022 at 22 measures and reached levels more comparable to before 2021 (Figure 7, panel 1).

In 2022, regulations on exports and export proceeds were eased and tightened in equal number of countries (17). This includes countries that simultaneously implemented easing and tightening measures in 2022. While easing measures peaked in 2022 compared to previous years, restrictive measures remained at comparable levels to 2021 (Figure 7, panel 2). Russia led with the most liberalizing measures (9), followed by Argentina and Uzbekistan (8), and by Kuwait and Belarus (5). Russia continued its liberalization trend with five measures relaxing surrender to authorized dealers and three measures aimed at easing repatriation requirements. Russia reduced the mandatory sale of foreign exchange by exporters to 50 percent in May 2022 after initially introducing an 80 percent surrender requirement in February 2022, increased the sale period from 60 days to 120 days, discontinued all surrender requirements for all exporters, and exempted resident exporters from the requirement to repatriate foreign currency. Argentina set the export duty rate at 0 percent for certain agricultural products and products that are environmentally friendly, biological, or organic, and relaxed both repatriation and surrender requirements to authorized dealers. Low-income developing countries also eased regulations on exports and export proceeds. Uzbekistan relaxed repatriation requirements by removing fines for a failure to repatriate foreign trade transaction assets in instances where there are no breaches of deadlines established in import contracts or in instances where a document from an authorized body is presented confirming the destruction or seizure of goods that have become unusable. Belarus and Kuwait lifted several bans on certain exports. At the same time, however, both Belarus and Kuwait together also had 12 tightening measures in this period, mostly implementing a ban on certain exports (see the following discussion).

Most of the remaining liberalizing measures were undertaken by 12 countries. These easing measures removed export regulations without quotas (Hungary, South Africa), relaxed repatriation requirements (Ukraine), granted exemptions or reductions from surrender requirements (Myanmar, Namibia, Sri Lanka, Zimbabwe), eliminated other export taxes (Pakistan), and removed export licenses (Bangladesh, Belgium, Czech Republic, Spain).

Most tightening measures introduced in 2022 were related to export licenses with quotas (11), surrender requirements to the central bank or authorized dealers (10), and repatriation requirements (5). Belarus led with the most restrictions (7), followed by Kuwait and Russia (5), and finally Pakistan (4). Almost all of the tightening actions by Belarus were related to instituting bans or licensing requirements on the export of certain products. For example, it introduced a ban on the export of over 250 industrial goods, as well as grains, cereals, meal, and cake. During the year, Belarus somewhat eased these restrictions (see earlier discussion) and then tightened them again as economic conditions worsened. Kuwait banned exports of iron scrap, chicken, sheep and goats, vegetable oils, and eggs. Russia implemented quantitative restrictions on exports of certain fertilizers, certain types of sulfurs, and recyclable paper. Russia also introduced a mandatory sale of 80 percent of foreign exchange earnings by exporters in the domestic market to increase the supply of foreign currency and required that registration in an authorized bank is required for various agreements related to certain loans or other foreign exchange transactions. Pakistan implemented various export taxes related to information technology services and computer software, and required that proceeds be repatriated through authorized dealers.

Most of the remaining tightening measures were implemented by 13 countries. These applied to surrender requirements to authorized dealers or the central bank (Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Myanmar, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Türkiye), export restrictions with quotas on precious metals (Kyrgyz Republic), tightening of repatriation requirements (Egypt, Iran, Morocco, Tanzania, Ukraine), and established other export taxes (Argentina).

The rise in easing actions in 2022 mostly contributed to the increase in total measures compared to 2021. Available data for 2023 shows a decline in overall measures.

Based on partial data for 2023, members implemented fewer easing and tightening measures in exports and export proceeds, as in previous years. As was the case in 2022, easing measures seem to outweigh tightening measures. Members with the most easing measures are Argentina (11) and Kuwait (5). Argentina, despite imposing some restrictions, also continued liberalizing by suspending or lifting repatriation requirements and suspending or amending export duty rates. For example, certain export proceeds must enter the country in foreign exchange, where 50 percent must be traded in the Free Foreign Exchange Market, and for the remaining 50 percent, the exporter was required to carry out purchase and sale transactions with negotiable securities acquired with settlement in foreign exchange and sold with settlement in local currency. Additionally, export duty rates for dairy products were suspended and rates on certain agro-industrial goods were reduced or eliminated. Similarly in a liberalizing trend, Kuwait lifted previously imposed bans on eggs, sheep, and goats. Additionally, restrictions regarding the export controls of goods manufactured by subsidized kerosene were revoked.

Most of the remaining liberalizing measures were implemented by 11 countries. Other countries eased the requirement to surrender to the central bank or authorized dealers, as was the case with Ethiopia, who reduced foreign exchange inflow from export goods to 50 percent (from 70 percent) required from banks to the central bank. Ethiopia also allowed exporters and inward remittances beneficiaries to retain 40 percent of export of goods and services earnings for an indefinite period in their domestic foreign exchange accounts. Pakistan increased the limit that software and service sector exports may retain in their net foreign exchange account to 50 percent, Sri Lanka discontinued the mandatory sales requirement of all licensed banks related to export and export proceeds, and in Zimbabwe the export surrender requirement was set at 25 percent on all export receipts. On export licenses, the temporary licensing requirement on the export of flax fiber expired in Belarus, and an advance declaration for exports with Guatemala and Honduras to further facilitate trade was implemented by El Salvador. Repatriation requirements were also reduced: Egypt increased the period for gold export proceeds to 30 days, Lao P.D.R. increased the number of days that exporters receive payments of goods and services by wire transfer to no longer than 180 days, and in Russia the repatriation requirement for Russian currency on foreign trade contracts for raw materials exports was lifted on 70 percent of the contract amount. Malaysia reduced tariff lines from 217 to 123.

Partial data for 2023 show fewer tightening measures than in 2022, but the trend may change once data for the entire year data become available. Countries with the most tightening measures are Argentina (4) and Kuwait (4), and Bangladesh (3). For example, some measures related to repatriation requirements and other export taxes in Argentina expired. Proceeds for some covered merchandise must enter the country in foreign exchange and be traded 80 percent through the foreign exchange market, while for the other 20 percent, the exporter is required to carry out purchase and sale transactions with negotiable securities with settlement in foreign exchange and sold with settlement in local currency. Kuwait introduced bans on the exports of certain types of goods such as methyl alcohol of all kinds, local and imported live sheep and goats (which was reversed with an easing later in the year), iron scrap, and cardboard paper waste. Bangladesh decreased retention limits for the Exporters' Retention Quota for merchandise exporters and instituted that in cases of export proceed realization beyond four months that exporters must receive proceeds at the exchange rate of the date within which the export proceeds should have been realized.

Most of the remaining tightening measures were implemented by nine countries. Hungary introduced restrictive measures against both Belarus and Russia. Colombia established measures for ferrous scrap, Montenegro extended the licensing regime exports of raw wood and certain products, and Russia established a nontariff quota for certain types of nitrogen and nitrogen-rich fertilizers. Honduras established that the foreign exchange currency agents must transfer 100 percent of foreign exchange income to the central bank no later than the following business day after the purchase. Indonesia tightened existing repatriation requirements related to natural resource export proceeds greater than $250,000 or the equivalent (free on board), by stipulating that at least 30 percent of the proceeds (net of the exporter's foreign exchange obligations) be retained for at least three months in the Indonesian financial system. Suriname reduced the deadline to surrender from five days to immediate surrender upon repatriation of export proceeds. Malawi established a requirement to complete an electronic customs declaration form for exports worth more than $2,000. Mexico applied an ad valorem tax of 50 percent to the export of white corn.

Current Invisible Transactions and Current Transfers

This section discusses exchange controls on invisible transactions and transfers that are included in the current account of the balance of payments. This category includes income from investment (for example, profits, dividends, and interest); payments for travel, education, medical expenses, and subscription and membership fees; unrequited transfers (for example, remittance of nonresidents' salaries and wages); and payments related to services. The section also covers the repatriation and surrender requirements for proceeds from current invisible transactions and current transfers.

Tightening measures increased considerably in 2022, reversing the liberalization trend experienced in 2021 and surpassing levels seen in 2019–21 (Figure 8, panel 1). These restrictive actions accounted for 47 changes in 2022, although they were still fewer than the easing measures (71). This trend appears to continue in the available data for 2023.

Payment for Current Invisibles and Current Transfers

In 2022, 16 countries reported 98 measures related to payment for current invisibles and current transfers. Easing (58) measures were somewhat greater than tightening (39) actions, with one neutral measure (Figure 8, panel 2). However, the increase in tightening measures was quite significant, at around five times higher compared to 2021 (8).

A total of 12 countries were responsible for the 58 liberalization actions, with Ukraine and Ecuador accounting for almost half of the total actions: Ukraine with 14 and Ecuador with 12. Ukraine gradually implemented easing measures (reversing some of the strict controls implemented at the start of the war; see the following discussion) to facilitate currency transfers in and out of the country after the invasion, especially for personal payments (including educational, insurance, and child support payments) and travel-related payments. Ecuador gradually reduced the capital outflow tax from 5 percent to 4 percent in a year in four steps that affected three categories (trade-related payments, investment-related payments, and credit card use abroad), resulting in 12 total easing measures. Argentina took eight liberalization measures by allowing exceptions to central bank approval for certain service payments, simplifying declarations for foreign exchange market access, and permitting certificates for knowledge economy investments as conditions for accessing foreign exchange without prior approval. Tajikistan relaxed the threshold for which individuals needed to present supporting documents to verify the source of their foreign exchange, after changing the reference unit for this calculation. This resulted in seven measures since it affected all type of payments. Russia, with five measures, gradually reversed a complete ban on payments of dividends and coupons to nonresidents, by allowing some payments in rubles.

Eight countries introduced 39 tightening actions, with Argentina and Ukraine accounting for more than half of those measures: Argentina with 15 and Ukraine with 10. Argentina implemented additional conditions for foreign exchange market access based on the previous year's payments, the inclusion of Argentine Depositary Receipts in affidavits for market access, new conditions for certifying non-acquisition of certain assets, and restricting market access for customers receiving public utility subsidies. Ukraine also implemented several tightening measures at the outset of the war, including requiring resident clients to use purchased foreign currency within two days, restricting cross-border currency transfers, limiting individual sales of foreign cash, setting limits on payment card transactions, and imposing temporary restrictions on import payments. Similarly, Russia implemented four measures including banning dividends and coupons payments to nonresidents (which were later relaxed somewhat [see previous discussion]). Myanmar took five measures, including the requirement for approval for all foreign exchange transfers and new limits for international credit card spending.

In the available data for 2023, 11 countries were responsible for 75 actions, with 41 easing, 29 tightening, and 5 neutral ones. Argentina stood out with 45 measures. The country implemented 24 tightening actions by expanding the scope of affidavits to include affiliates within the same economic group, tightening the timeframe for delivering local currency and assets, and including cover operations with securities conducted directly or indirectly on behalf of third parties in affidavits. At the same time, Argentina also took 20 easing measures, including the allowance of affidavits to confirm nondelivery of local currency or assets to entities not associated with regular business operations, the exclusion of certain securities sales from currency usage calculations, and streamlined access to foreign exchange for nonresident services under specified conditions. Ukraine was responsible for five easing actions, exempting bond income transfers to foreigners and adding a special code for military-related transfers and health care payments. Other countries that took a considerable number of easing measures were Ecuador (with six actions as a result of reducing the capital outflow tax even further), Fiji (with four measures after increasing payment limits), and Nepal (with three actions on transfer limits and travel allowance).

Proceeds from Current Invisibles and Current Transfers

A total of 12 countries reported 24 changes in 2022, composed of 13 easing measures, 8 tightening measures, and 3 neutral changes, following the trend of 2021 (Figure 8, panel 3). Of the 24, 16 total changes concerned surrender requirements and 8 targeted repatriation requirements.

Eight countries were responsible for the 13 easing measures, with Russia leading with three actions aimed at liberalizing repatriation requirements for raw material exports and certain foreign trade and loans. Argentina also took three measures, mainly by relaxing surrender requirements to authorized dealers. Ukraine relaxed, in two steps, the repatriation requirements deadline to 180 days after having initially tightened to 90 days following the imposition of martial law. Surrender requirements were also relaxed by Bangladesh, Haiti, Myanmar, and Sri Lanka, while South Africa eased repatriation requirements.

Seven countries introduced the eight tightening measures. Ethiopia took two actions, requiring commercial banks to send 70 percent of their foreign exchange inflow from export of goods, services, private transfers, and non-governmental organization transfers to the National Bank of Ethiopia. Similarly, Sri Lanka introduced a measure requiring all banks to sell 25 percent of remittances on a weekly basis to the Central Bank of Sri Lanka. Suriname obligated exporters to sell 35 percent of the export proceeds to commercial banks. Myanmar started to require that foreign exchange earnings entering bank accounts be surrendered within one working day. Guyana and Haiti also tightened surrender requirements, while Ukraine imposed restrictions on repatriation requirements.

So far in 2023, 11 countries have taken 16 measures, mainly easing actions (13). Argentina stands out with five actions, three of them related to repatriation requirements. Initially, they took two easing measures by allowing 70 percent instead of 100 percent (later further eased to 50 percent) of export proceeds to enter through the Free Foreign Exchange Market (official market), with the remainder handled via local currency securities transactions. However, by the end of the year, this measure was reversed, and the portion exchanged through the Free Foreign Exchange Market was increased to 80 percent. Lao P.D.R. eased the repatriation requirements, granting exporters an additional 60 days to repatriate funds. Five other countries took easing measures on surrender requirements—Bhutan, Ethiopia, Myanmar, Sri Lanka, and Zimbabwe—while Russia and South Africa liberalized repatriation requirements. Honduras and Suriname took tightening measures on surrender requirements.

1. Total Number of Measures

The number of actions in 2022 grew compared to 2021. However, in 2022, this was attributable to an increase in tightening measures rather than easing measures, unlike 2021.

There was a marked increase in the number of tightening measures in 2022, and the trend seems to continue with available data for 2023.

The number of actions reflected roughly the same trend and proportions in 2022 compared to 2021. Although, 2023 thus far shows a drop in tightening actions.

Account Transactions

This section details changes and regulations on resident and nonresident accounts transactions. Liberalization measures dominated regulatory changes in the reporting period. From January 2022 through December 2023,[47] 93 of the 196 changes in resident and nonresident account regulations were easing measures, followed by 56 tightening and 47 neutral measures. These regulations were enacted by 36 countries,[48] mainly EMDEs taking liberalization measures (Figure 9, panel 1).

The number of changes in regulations in this category slightly decreased in 2022, compared with 2021, from 124 to 120. Among the 120 changes reported in 2022, 58 were liberalization efforts, while 37 were tightening measures and 25 neutral. This shows a strong increase in tightening measures and a drop in liberalization regulations compared with 2021, mainly driven by an increase in the number of countries taking tightening measures accompanied with a smaller number who eased.[49] So far, partial 2023 data shows 76 regulatory changes, with a more balanced distribution of easing, neutral, and tightening measures (Figure 9, panel 2).

Resident Accounts

Twenty members reported 70 measures concerning resident accounts in 2022, of which liberalization actions (40) outnumbered tightening (19) and neutral (11) measures (Figure 10, panel 1). While easing measures kept the same trend compared with 2021, tightening actions more than doubled from their previous levels.

Among the 40 easing measures, Russia dominated with 11 measures, followed by Ecuador with 8 measures. The former progressively lifted transfer and withdrawal controls imposed to foreign currencies accounts to limit the capital flight after the invasion of Ukraine. Ecuador's measures are all related to a progressive reduction (one per quarter) of the capital outflow tax. Because this tax affects both domestic and foreign currency accounts held abroad, these four reductions are counted as eight measures. Sri Lanka introduced four liberalization measures by allowing educational institutes to receive foreign tuition fees and by introducing facilities for the investment and payments in Colombo Port City. Curaçao and Sint Maarten lifted every control to foreign exchange accounts held domestically and eased the limits to transfers to accounts held abroad, going back to pre-COVID-19 rules. Ukraine gradually increased the limits for the withdrawal of foreign exchange in cash and allowed nonbank companies to open foreign currency payment accounts for their services. The rest of the easing measures were implemented by 10 countries, with roughly one measure made by each one of them.

The 19 tightening measures in 2022 were introduced by seven countries, with Russia dominating again (6). This country imposed several limits on the transfer and withdrawal of foreign currency, as well as restrictions on the exchange rate used to convert funds received as a transfer from a bank outside Russia, immediately after its invasion of Ukraine. Most of these measures were later eased or lifted (see previous discussion). Related to the invasion, Ukraine also incorporated three tightening measures by prohibiting any exchange transaction using Russian rubles or Belarusian rubles, as well as banned most cross-border transfers from the country, with some exceptions. Argentina tightened rules on accounts convertible into foreign currency by adding conditions for accessing foreign exchange, requiring affidavits for Argentine Depositary Receipts, and restricting market access for subsidized utility users. Myanmar also began to require approval of any foreign exchange transaction (either domestic or abroad) by a supervisory committee that allocates foreign exchange based on priorities. The rest of the tightening measures were enforced by Bangladesh and Kyrgyz Republic (one each), and Algeria (two).

So far in 2023, 41 measures were imposed. A total of 24 of them were easing measures, while 9 were tightening and 8 were neutral. These numbers reflect a similar trend as in 2022, where the total liberalization actions doubled the tightening ones. Argentina stood out with a total of 12 measures: 5 easing and 7 tightening. Among the easing measures, the country lifted yuan and renminbi authorization requirements and simplified affidavit requirements and certain funds and securities authorization. However, the tightening measures also include stricter affidavit rules for certain economic groups and the prohibition on social security and pension

[48] Note that the number of countries in Figure 9, panel 1, may not add up in the text because certain countries introduced tightening measures at the same time as neutral or easing measures.

[49] While only 6 countries implemented tightening measures in 2021, 12 countries did in 2022. At the same time, in 2021, 25 countries implemented easing measures, compared to 16 countries in 2022.

debtors to access foreign exchange convertible accounts. Russia was responsible for seven neutral measures, all of them extensions of previous regulations, including US dollars and euros cash withdrawal limits. Sri Lanka, addressing domestic foreign exchange liquidity issues, limited outward remittances from personal and business foreign currency accounts. Lebanon took two easing measures by improving the exchange rate for conversions to Lebanese pounds in foreign currency accounts, due to the large depreciation of the local currency and the shortage of reserves.

Nonresident Accounts

Sixteen members reported 50 changes in 2022, a similar number as in 2021 (52). However, tightening measures (18) experienced a rapid growth, doubling the number of 2021 (9), and reaching the number of easing measures (Figure 10, panel 2). On the contrary, easing measures declined, from 25 in 2021 to 18 in 2022.

The increase of tightening measures was partially attributed to the conflict between Russia and Ukraine, accounting for 10 of the total actions. Russia was responsible of seven of them, including transfer limits and withdrawal restrictions on accounts held by residents from sanctioning countries, but also by limiting the number of operations performed from accounts that have debt obligations to creditors from sanctioning countries. It is worth mentioning that in the same year, the country progressives removed and relaxed the aforementioned limits on nonresidents from such countries. Ukraine took three tightening regulations, prohibiting foreign currency trading and cross-border transfers, with exceptions for specific transactions reviewed based on current conditions and government requirements. Andorra reported, in line with the adopted EU sanctions, that it took tightening measures after the Russian invasion of Ukraine by imposing restrictions on large deposit accounts held by Russian nationals residing in Russia or any country outside the European Economic Area. On the other hand, Argentina tightened rules on foreign exchange convertible accounts by implementing new conditions to certify that customers have not and will not engage in certain foreign securities and asset transactions. The rest of the tightening regulations were imposed by four other countries, taking one measure each: Hungary, Ireland, Kyrgyz Republic, and Myanmar.

Eighteen easing measures were enforced by seven countries. Russia, again, stands out with roughly half of those measures (eight). As mentioned, the country progressively eased rules for nonresident accounts by increasing transfer limits for individuals and entities from friendly countries, while maintaining lower limits for those from sanctioning countries, and allowing wage-related transfers for all nonresidents. Sri Lanka introduced three measures, allowing debits for Sri Lankan expatriates paying educational tuition fees and crediting earnings from authorized businesses in Colombo Port City. Argentina was also responsible for two easing measures, facilitating the access of social security agencies to the foreign exchange market. Brazil allowed nonresident account holders who are financial institutions to use their accounts for both receiving and remitting funds on behalf of a third party, whereas previously, only inbound transfers were permitted. The other four easing measures were enforced by three other countries: Lebanon (one), Morocco (two), and Ukraine (one).

So far in 2023, the rapid growth of tightening measures seems to have slowed down, accounting for 10 out of the total 35 measures in the available data. While there were 11 easing measures and 14 neutral ones. Argentina, again, stood out with three easing actions, simplifying access to the foreign exchange market by removing the need for affidavits if a customer's funds coming from debt security issues are deposited in foreign bank accounts or if the funds from the sale of securities settled in foreign currency are used or will be used within 10 days. However, the country was also responsible for two tightening measures, expanding affidavit requirements to more entities, and specifying additional coordination rules for securities operations. Lebanon took two easing actions by improving the exchange rate for conversions to Lebanese pounds in foreign currency accounts, but Lebanon also enforced one tightening measure, whereby nonresidents customers could no longer get US dollars when they withdrew money from their domestic currency accounts. Additionally, Fiji's central bank no longer requires approval for deposits of proceeds, up to a certain limit. Russia is responsible for 12 neutral measures, all of them extensions of previous withdrawal and transfer limits for residents from both friendly and sanctioning countries, for both foreign exchange and domestic currency accounts. Other measures included restrictions imposed by Norway on accounts held by citizens of Haiti and Moldova for security reasons.

Capital Controls

The major challenges the global economy faced during 2022 and 2023 had significant implications for capital flows. Economic activity still falls short of its prepandemic path, especially in EMDEs, with widening divergence among the regions. Major factors holding back the recoveries in 2022 were the long-term consequences of the pandemic and the rising geopolitical tension (see the January 2023, April 2023, and October 2023 vintages of the World Economic Outlook). The global economy continued to recover unevenly and slowly from the pandemic and were affected by cost-of-living crisis and the rising geopolitical tensions among major economies from Russia's invasion of Ukraine and amid diplomatic tensions between China and the United States. Food prices elevated by an escalation of the war in Ukraine, causing important hardship for many low-income countries. Global commodity prices in general became more volatile under the geopolitical tensions and disruptions linked to climate changes, causing higher external vulnerabilities for many net commodity-importing countries. The escalation of geopolitical tension raised concerns about a policy-driven reversal of economic and financial integration, and of allocation of cross-border capital, with investors generally allocating a smaller share of capital to recipient countries with more distant foreign policy outlooks to their country of origin, and higher restrictions placed on capital flows (see the April 2023 Global Financial Stability Report). The monetary tightening in major economies resulted in a decline in net capital flows to EMDEs. Countries with more concentrated foreign exposures experienced higher capital flow volatility.

EMDEs and low-income developing countries experienced a sharp drop in net capital inflows in 2022 (Figure 11, panel 1), which was largely explained by contraction in portfolio inflows, lower inflows to other investment (such as loans, deposits, trade credits), and a reduction in FDI flows (Figure 11, panel 2). Advanced economies in 2022–23 saw lower capital flows (both inflows and outflows) in all categories, especially portfolio outflows and outward direct investment, and started to accumulate reserve assets (Figure 11, panel 3). The lower volumes of financial flows and transactions in developed countries resulted in a decline in global FDI flows, which was attributable to investor uncertainty from the war in Ukraine, high food and energy prices, and debt pressures. International project finance and cross-border mergers and acquisitions were especially affected by tighter financing conditions, rising interest rates, and uncertainty in capital market.[50]

This section discusses measures that affect international capital flows. These measures are also considered to be capital flow management measures (CFMs) as defined by the IMF's institutional view on the liberalization and management of capital flows.[51] In addition to the capital controls included in this section, prudential-type measures discussed in the next section may also be CFMs if they were designed to limit capital flows. However, the AREAER does not use this terminology because classifying a measure as a CFM requires substantial background information and considerable judgment, which is beyond the scope of the analysis conducted in compiling the AREAER database.

[50] UN Trade and Development, 2023, World Investment Report.

[51] CFMs encompass a broad spectrum of measures. For the purposes of the IMF's institutional view, the term "capital flow management measures" refers to measures designed to limit capital flows. CFMs comprise residency-based CFMs, which encompass a variety of measures (including taxes and regulations) affecting cross-border financial activity that discriminate on the basis of residency—also generally referred to as capital controls—and other CFMs, which do not discriminate on the basis of residency but are nonetheless designed to limit capital flows. These other CFMs typically include measures, such as some prudential measures, that differentiate transactions on the basis of currency, as well as other measures that typically apply to the nonfinancial sector. The concept of capital controls in the AREAER is residency-based: it includes various measures that regulate the conclusion or execution of transactions and transfers and the holding of assets at home by nonresidents and abroad by residents. See IMF, 2022, Review of The Institutional View on The Liberalization and Management of Capital Flows, Washington, DC.

The number of measures implemented in 2022 continued to rise significantly from previous years—509 measures compared with 380 measures and 434 measures in 2020 and 2021, respectively (Figure 12, panel 1).[52] Partial data for 2023 suggests that the pace of changes in capital controls continues to remain high. Of the 509 changes in 2022, there were 159 tightening actions, 320 easing actions, and 30 actions that were neutral or of an indeterminate nature.[53] There was a steep rise in tightening actions in 2022 compared with 2021, which comprises an increase in both tightening outflow controls (by almost three times) and inflow controls (by more than three times) (Figure 12, panel 2).[54] In 2022, almost one-third of the number of tightening actions was as a consequence of tensions from Russia's war on Ukraine; 52 of 159 total tightening actions were [52] The AREAER records the imposition/removal of restrictions across all affected categories of transactions, thereby showing a large number of measures taken by some countries. The total number of measures in 2022 includes a relatively large number of changes reported by a few countries such as Argentina, Ecuador, and Russia, and in 2023 again by Argentina and Ecuador. While Argentina adjusted its regulation in response to its economic situation, Russia imposed controls as a consequence of its war with Ukraine, and Ecuador gradually reduced its tax on capital outflows. Hence, in the case of Ecuador, 116 easing measures are reported in 2022 because the change in its tax is recorded in the AREAER over many categories. Excluding measures attributed to Ecuador, in 2022, the total number of measures would drop below 2021, reflecting a slowdown in easing trend and a more pronounced tightening trend in 2022.

[53] The 30 neutral changes during 2022 and 42 in 2023 cannot be classified as easing or tightening of restrictions. Most either did not discriminate by residence or currency or involved changes in regulations that were not clearly either easing or tightening. To avoid counting the same measure more than once, as far as possible, measures that were extended were labeled neutral (for example, pandemic-related measures).

[54] In this section, restrictions on nonresidents' acquisition of domestic assets (including restrictions on repatriation of these assets) are referred to as "inflow controls"; restrictions on residents' acquisition of assets abroad (including repatriation restrictions on these assets) are referred to as "outflow controls."

measures introduced in response to the Russia's war on Ukraine[55] implemented by Russia and Ukraine following Russia's invasion of Ukraine to prevent capital outflows, sanction measures from Russia to other countries, as well as the related international sanctions measures (Figure 12, panel 3). Changes to controls on outflows in response to the war in Ukraine were explicitly reported by Canada, Germany, and Japan. In partial year 2023, the tension-related measures were fewer. The number of easing actions in 2022 were roughly similar to previous year. Measures easing inflows increased, while measures easing outflows decreased compared to the previous year (Figure 12, panel 4). The number of COVID-19–related measures reported in 2022 were few. Of these, some were to unwind the pandemic-related measures, while some were extension of the measures.

Not only were there more actions taken in 2022 than in the preceding year, but also the number of countries reporting changes increased (mainly owing to the higher number of advanced economies reporting changes). The majority of actions were tightening on capital transactions taken by EMDEs, followed by advanced economies. The average number of controls per country increased gradually during 2020–23 (Figure 13). On average, controls on capital transactions during 2022–23 were implemented mostly by EMDEs, followed by low-income developing countries and advanced economies.

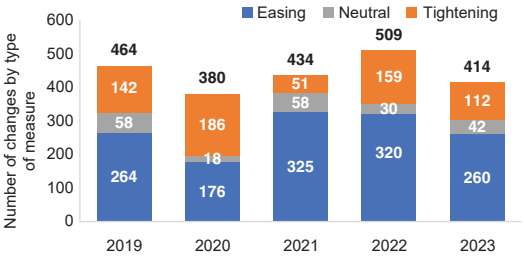
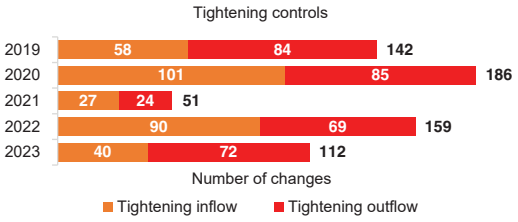
1. Total Number of Measures

2022 saw a sharp increase in tightening measures as a part of policy response to geopolitical tensions, while the number of easing measures were roughly similar to previous year.



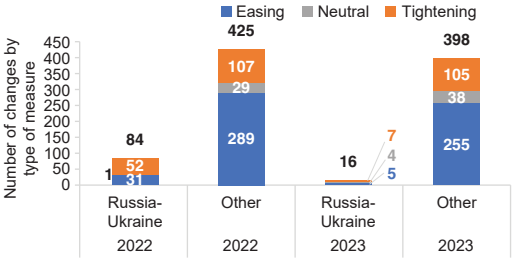
2. Tightening Controls

In 2022, the sharp rise in tightening measures were in both directions, with a larger number of tightening inflow measures.



3. Geopolitical Impact

In 2022, almost one-third of the number of tightening actions was as a result of geopolitical tension. Partial year 2023 data show far fewer numbers of geopolitical tension–related measures than 2022.



4. Easing Controls

In 2022, measures easing inflows increased, while measures easing outflows decreased comparing to the previous year.

Note: The position date for 2023 varies by country but is at least the end of June 2023 for most countries, with some members' reporting periods ending during the second half of 2023. Tightening (Easing) I/O means that the measure can be tightening (easing) of both capital inflows and outflows. Geopolitical refers to changes made by Russia and Ukraine as well as changes reported by Canada, Germany, and Japan that are explicitly reported as measures in response to the geopolitical tension between Russia and Ukraine. "Other" refers to changes that are not related to the geopolitical tension.

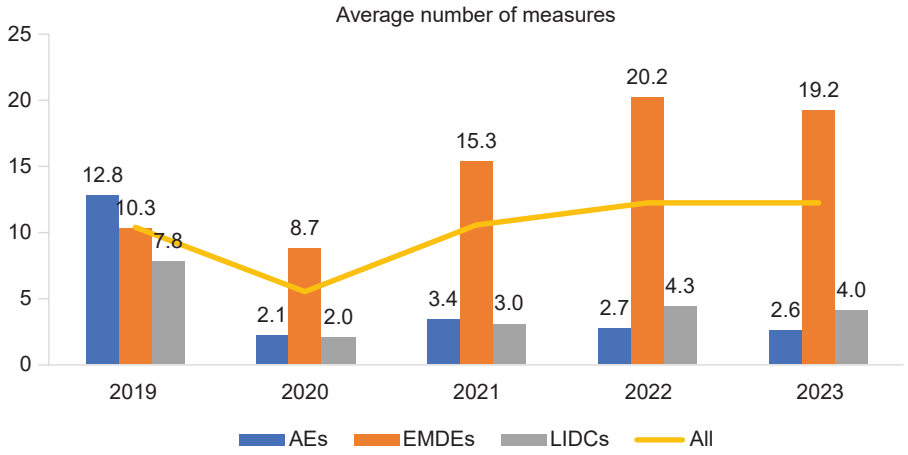
On average, controls on capital transactions during 2022–23 were implemented mostly by EMDEs, followed by LIDCs and AEs. The average number of controls increased gradually during 2020–23.



Sources: IMF, AREAER database; and IMF staff calculations.
Note: The position date for 2023 varies by country but is at least the end of June 2023 for most countries, with some members' reporting periods ending during the second half of 2023. Some countries may have taken both tightening and easing actions. AEs = advanced economies; EMDEs = emerging market and developing economies; LIDCs = low-income developing countries.

Actions taken by advanced economies increased in 2022 driven mainly by the increase in the number of tightening measures, while the number of easing measures slightly decreased. The number of countries implemented actions also increased, mainly because of the higher number of countries taking tightening measures. In 2022, the total number of changes in the controls on capital transactions in advanced economies amounted to 38, of which 20 were tightening (by nine countries), 13 easing (by five countries), and 5 neutral (by three countries) (Figure 14, panels 1 and 2).

Most of the actions in 2022 and 2023 were reported by EMDEs, similar to past years. Overall changes in measures in 2022 reached their highest level since 2019, owing to a sharp increase in tightening measures, while the number of easing measures dropped slightly. The tightening measures in 2022 were roughly four times more than the previous year. The trend continued in 2023. The number of countries taking tightening actions also increased in 2022 compared with the previous year, while the number of countries easing controls decreased. In 2022, the total number of changes in the controls on capital transactions in EMDEs amounted to 445, of which 288 were easing (by 16 countries), 133 tightening (by 10 countries), and 24 neutral (by 5 countries) (Figure 14, panels 3 and 4).

Low-income developing countries reported more actions (increased in both tightening and easing actions) during 2022–23. Unlike EMDEs, reported measures continued to be largely dominated by easing controls on capital transactions (Figure 14, panels 5 and 6). The trend continued in 2023. Similarly to the past, only a few low-income developing countries implemented changes in 2022–23. The number of countries easing and tightening controls remained roughly the same in 2022–23. In 2022, the total number of changes in the controls on capital transactions in low-income developing countries amounted to 26, of which 19 were easing (by three countries), 6 tightening (by three countries), and 1 neutral (by one country).

The nature of new measures differed significantly among country income groups. The majority of the measures adopted in advanced economies were related to direct investment, real estate, capital and money market instruments, and derivatives. There was a sharp rise in real estate–related measures in 2022 (Figure 15, panel 1). For EMDEs, most changes continued to relate to capital and money market instruments, followed by personal capital transactions, credit operations, and derivative transactions (Figure 15, panel 2). Of the 42 economies that took action in 2022, 11 (mostly EMDEs) had 10 or more actions (Figure 15, panel 3). The majority of actions introduced in low-income developing countries continued to be related to capital and money market instruments, followed by credit operations and repatriation requirements (Figure 15, panel 4).

Advanced Economies

In advanced economies, FDI-related measures continued to dominate and outnumber actions related to capital and money market instruments, real estate, and derivatives in 2022–23 (Figure 15, panel 1). In 2022, the number of real estate–related measures increased significantly, which were linked to the FDI-related measures arising from the implementation of the foreign investment screening frameworks and an extension of existing measures in some advanced economies (see following discussion).

Of the 20 tightening actions by advanced economies in 2022, 15 were measures related to restrictions on inward FDI and investment in property (Canada, France, Italy, New Zealand, Slovak Republic, United Kingdom), and five restricted capital outflows (Canada, Japan).[56] On capital inflow restrictions, stronger rules and enforcements with broader scope were introduced with respect to the national security screening of FDI in several countries such as Canada (more stringent approval requirement for foreign state-owned enterprise investment in Canada's critical mineral sectors as well as investments with ties to Russia), France (added production of renewable energy to the list of critical technologies that require FDI screening), Italy (making permanent the decree allowing the government to initiate Golden Power in reviewing FDI in several critical sectors to the country), New Zealand (applying the "benefit to New Zealand" test prior to investment in conversion of land to forestry production), and the United Kingdom (adopting mandatory notification and clearance requirement for several critical business sectors and assets such as land, physical assets, and intellectual property). In addition, several measures were introduced/tightened on foreign acquisition of local properties such as Slovak Republic (more stringent rule against the fragmentation of the agricultural land by modifying their prohibition of creating new land or new co-owner's deal agricultural land to include smaller size of land) and Canada (imposed a nonresident deed transfer tax and gradually increasing nonresident speculation tax and additional property transfer tax in some provinces as well as increasing coverage arear for applying tax). On capital outflow restrictions, Japan applied controls to outward direct investment by residents which pertains to a business conducted in, or controlled by, or established based on the laws and regulations of the Russian Federation. Japan also applied approval requirement on acquisition and transfer of securities newly issued by the commercial banks or Government of the Russian Federation. Canada prohibited residents and Canadians abroad from making an investment that involves dealing in any property located in, or owned, or held, or controlled by the Donetsk People's Republic and/or Luhansk People's Republic regions of Ukraine.[57]

There were 13 easing actions reported in 2022 by Australia, Canada, Hong Kong SAR, Iceland, and Portugal. The reform on foreign investment review/screening framework in Canada not only results in aforementioned tighter restrictions, but also streamlines the process for certain less sensitive types of investment and continues increasing the review threshold for certain direct acquisition of control in enterprises from countries under particular trade and investment agreements. Iceland relaxed controls relating to derivative transactions between Icelandic commercial banks. Australia increased the monetary thresholds within the scope of the investment screening framework for direct investment and investment in developed commercial land. Purchase locally by nonresidents under certain conditions were relaxed, such as no registration and approval requirements for bids to buy bonds and other debt security (Portugal), and refund of residential stamp duty for permanent residents under designated talent admission schemes (Hong Kong SAR).

In 2023, there were four tightening measures and four easing measures that remain related to controls on inward FDI and investment in property. Tightening measures were reported by Australia (increasing land tax surcharge in New South Wales), Canada (temporary prohibiting non-Canadian citizens nor nonpermanent residents of Canada from purchasing residential property in Canada, with some exceptions), Japan (prior notification requirement for investment in business sectors contributing to securing stable supply chains of critical goods, such as metals and mineral products refining and storage battery manufacturing), and Singapore (increasing Additional Buyer's Stamp Duty on several categories of residential property). Easing measures were reported by Slovenia (abolishing notification requirement for acquiring land or real estate by foreign investors or their subsidiaries under Investment Promotion Act). There was also continued relaxation of the overall screening threshold (Australia) and for certain countries under particular trade and investment agreements (Canada).

[56] In addition, there were five neutral measures reported by advanced economies in 2022. These include extensions of measures taken earlier regarding FDI screening (Germany, Italy, Spain).

[57] Donetsk and Luhansk are the regions of Ukraine that are temporarily occupied by Russia.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

There were 13 neutral measures in 2023. For example, Spain continued to extend the duration of the existing prior authorization requirement for FDI and acquisition of shares from non-EU residents under its investment screening measures. In Slovenia, although the control on foreign acquisition of land and real estate under Investment Promotion Act in the previous year was relaxed, there was continued and uninterrupted operation of the inward direct investment screening mechanism. Germany established some new offenses that will be subject to fines and laid the foundation for an extensive digitalization of the investment review procedure.

Emerging Market and Developing Economies

The majority of actions in 2022 and 2023 taken by EMDEs remained largely related to capital and money market instruments (236 and 174, respectively), followed by personal capital transactions (55 and 52, respectively), credit operations (48 and 57, respectively), derivatives (40 and 26, respectively), and direct investment (28 and 21, respectively) (Figure 15, panel 2). The sharp increase in actions in 2022 were largely explained by measures related to capital and money market instruments.

There were 133 tightening measures in 2022 by Argentina (43), Russia (49), Ukraine (27), Jamaica (8), and 1 measure each by Armenia, Angola, China, Indonesia, Hungary, and South Africa (Figure 15, panel 3).[58] Argentina tightened the capital outflows by adopting more stringent criteria on access to the foreign exchange market to purchase foreign exchange and transfer funds abroad without prior approval by the central bank, which requires submission of an affidavit linked to their holdings of external assets in Argentina and abroad. The scope of affidavits was broadened to include that residents do not hold Argentine certificates of deposit representing foreign shares as well as certify that they have not—and will not—purchase Argentine certificates of deposit and securities representing private debt issued abroad during and after the period they apply for market access. As a consequence of Russia's war on Ukraine, Russia prohibited resident and nonresident outward capital transactions in several categories, introduced a ban on the payment of dividends to nonresidents and prohibited transfer of proceeds from the sale of securities, tightened certain conditions on debt repayment (foreign currency debt could be paid only in rubles, introduced certain limits and periods for debt repayment to creditors who are residents of the Russian Federation and creditors from countries that have not joined sanctions against Russia, and introduced special accounts opened with Russian and foreign credit institutions for ruble repayments on debt obligations to creditors from the countries that have imposed sanctions against Russia). In Ukraine, banks were prohibited from carrying out transfers of individuals related to current noncommercial transactions. A temporary ban on transfers of funds from Ukraine was imposed related to transactions involving the return of foreign investments to correspondent accounts of nonresident banks. Jamaica imposed a ban on foreign exchange debt issuance in Jamaica, which was lifted in less than a month and was replaced by an approval requirement. The issuer of foreign exchange debt in Jamaica must submit an attestation that the issuance of bonds via exempt distribution would not create a demand for foreign exchange. South Africa tightened outflows by unwinding the temporary measure imposed during COVID-19, by not extending the period in which residents must sell foreign currency to authorize dealers; Angola introduced repatriation requirement for distributed profits or dividends, as well as for liquidation of investments made abroad by foreign resident legal entities; and Armenia introduced controls on transfer of gambling proceeds such that these could no longer be done with cash. Indonesia reduced the threshold amount for underlying document requirement for purchase of derivatives, Hungary disallowed certain nonresident institutions/persons to purchase a Hungarian forint–denominated debt instrument issued by the central bank of a member state of the European Union, and China increased the macroprudential adjustment parameter for financial institutions and enterprises.

[58] There were 24 neutral changes reported by EMDEs in 2022, led by Sri Lanka (15). Most of these actions by Sri Lanka were initially implemented in response to the pandemic and then continued to defend the weak balance of payment situation it faced in subsequent years. For example, Sri Lanka extended the limit imposed on the outward remittances or issuance of foreign exchange for any Sri Lankan individual who resides in or outside Sri Lanka and has obtained a temporary residence visa, and payments through Outward Investment Accounts for the purpose of making investments in overseas by persons resident in Sri Lanka under general permission were further suspended with some exceptions.

Among the 288 easing measures in 2022, 116 were implemented by Ecuador (which involved the gradual reduction [in four steps] of capital outflow tax[59]), 38 by Argentina (which eased controls on both capital inflows and outflows), and 34 by Curaçao and Sint Maarten (related to the elimination of the temporary maximum limits on residents' and nonresidents' outward capital transactions including on investments abroad by pension funds and insurance companies, bringing the regulations back to prepandemic state). Other major contributors to changes were Russia (29), South Africa (27), China (11), Ukraine (6), Brazil (6), India (5), Jamaica (4), Colombia (4), Thailand (3), Morocco (2), Maldives (1), Indonesia (1), and Algeria (1). Argentina eased capital outflows by broadening the scope of affidavit to include payments of external trade and financial credits under certain conditions: prior approval by the central bank was not required. Argentina eased capital inflows by allowing authorized institutions to receive foreign currency from nonresident tourists and to arrange, on their behalf, the purchase of securities with settlement in foreign currency for their subsequent sale with settlement in pesos. Further, Argentina provided exceptions for (1) the liquidation regime,[60] where nonresidents registered in the Regime for the Promotion of the Knowledge Economy and are enterprises that have no control on local financial institutions can repatriate their direct investments without the central bank authorization. In addition, nonresidents registered in this regime, provided they have certificate for regimes to access foreign exchange for incremental production of oil and/or natural gas, are exempted from the central bank authorization to access the foreign exchange market for repatriations of direct investments. (2) Certain requirements are exempted for principal payments on foreign financial debts when the creditor is a counterparty connected with the debtor with the central bank authorization. Russia replaced the ban for brokerage firms with prior approval requirement for residents acquiring shares from a company of an unfriendly country under certain criteria. Russia also lifted the prior approval requirement for payment and transfer for investment in a friendly country in the currency of the friendly country or in rubles in a specified threshold amount, as well as for making a contribution to nonresidents under a simple partnership agreement within the specified threshold amount if the payment is made in the currency of unfriendly country, and regardless of the amount otherwise. South Africa eased regulations on both inward FDI (by increasing the limit on the transfer of foreign exchange from the parent company to its Domestic Treasury Management Company) and outward investment (by raising the permitted threshold for direct investments without the need for approval and by raising the limit for foreign portfolio investment by pension funds, life insurers, and qualified institutional investors). In addition, resident individuals were allowed to use their single discretionary allowance and/or foreign capital allowance to participate in online foreign exchange trading activities (including trading global currencies against each other, trading in foreign stocks, trading commodities including crypto currencies, and trading foreign indexes using the online trading platform of the broker concerned) but may not use credit or debit cards to do so. Resident individuals no longer had to repatriate gifts, donations, or foreign inheritance received from nonresidents and could retain them offshore. China further eased certain regulations regarding nonresidents' participation in credit operations and capital money market instruments. In addition, China continued to open its economy to FDI by improving management of the negative lists for investment and market access and increasing openness in the manufacturing sector, for instance, by eliminating the foreign ownership limits on manufacturing passenger vehicles. Ukraine eased capital outflows by extending the deadline for settlements on transactions involving the export/import of goods. Brazil eased capital flows by allowing authorized institutions to allocate, invest, and set aside the fund raised in the country and abroad for credits and financing operations, in the country and abroad. Previously, financial institutions were forbidden to remit abroad (apply or promote the placement, including lending—except for some official programs) funds pooled in Brazil. In addition, the restriction where derivative transactions without an underlying operation were not allowed was lifted. Brazil also eased capital inflows by removing tax on financial transactions (Imposto sobre Operações Financeiras) for external loans with maturity less than 180 days, as well as allowing nonresidents to use borrowed securities/assets for margin purposes as collateral in the derivatives market. India further enhanced capital inflows and expanded the sources of foreign exchange funding by temporarily increasing the limit under the automatic route of External Commercial Borrowings and by allowing registered nonresident investors to participate in Indian debt markets, as well as expanding the coverage of eligible central government securities under a Fully [59] While this may be seen as one policy action taken in four steps, the AREAER records each step in all affected categories of transactions, thereby showing a large number of measures taken by the country.

[60] In this section, restrictions on nonresidents' acquisition of domestic assets (including restrictions on repatriation of these assets) are referred to as "inflow controls"; restrictions on residents' acquisition of assets abroad (including repatriation restrictions on these assets) are referred to as "outflow controls."

Accessible Route by foreign investors. Also, the investment limit under the Voluntary Retention Route for investment in government and corporate debt securities by foreign portfolio investors were increased. Jamaica lifted the ban on foreign exchange debt issuance in Jamaica. Colombia lifted the ban and allowed exchange market intermediaries to carry out financial derivative transactions denominated in domestic currency with authorized foreign agents, subject to certain restrictions and prohibitions. Thailand continued to liberalize capital outflows by abolishing approval requirements for residents lending to nonresidents, as well as eliminated the annual limit for residents' purchase of immovable assets including leasehold properties abroad and abolished the annual limit on the amount a Thai juridical person could lend to nonaffiliated companies abroad. Morocco increased the limit that authorized banks may transfer on behalf of qualified resident corporations to purchase shares in existing companies abroad. Maldives removed the approval requirement for profit repatriation by foreign investors. Indonesia allowed for transactions in local structured derivative products.

The 237 easing measures in 2023 were dominated by Argentina (94), Ecuador (58), and Aruba (37). Argentina added an exception in the affidavit required to access the foreign exchange market under certain conditions for payments of principal or interest on financial indebtedness, repatriation of capital and income associated with nonresident investments, and payments upon maturity of principal or interest on debt securities. Ecuador continued the gradual reduction (in two steps) of capital outflow tax. With the strengthening of the foreign exchange reserve position, Aruba further eased capital outflows by increasing the threshold amount for requirement of a foreign exchange license for executing capital transactions with nonresidents for both individual persons and legal entities.

The 105 tightening measures in 2023 were dominated by Argentina (85). Argentina tightened capital outflows by residents by placing prior approval requirement to make payment abroad for interest on commercial debts and/or financial loans abroad. Additional limitations were imposed such as further broadening the scope of the affidavits to include those legal entities which are part of the same economic group, and the requirement to provide affidavits that residents have not entered into securities transactions in Argentina nor delivered in the country any funds in local currency or other liquid assets, except funds in foreign currency deposited in local financial entities, to any controlling company or other companies with which they form part of the same economic group.

Low-Income Developing Countries

Actions introduced by low-income developing countries in 2022 increased from the previous year, dominated by measures in capital and money market instruments, followed by actions related to credit operations and repatriation requirements. A similar trend continued in 2023 (Figure 15, panel 4).

The liberalization trend seen in low-income developing countries in the previous four years continued in 2022–23. Easing of controls on capital transactions dominated during the period (19 easing measures both in 2022 and partial year of 2023, respectively), while the number of tightening actions continued to be small (6 and 3 tightening measure in 2022 and partial year of 2023, respectively) (Figure 14, panel 5).

In 2022, there were 19 easing measures by Tanzania (17), Myanmar (1), and Nepal (1). Tanzania liberalized both capital inflows and outflows. Tanzania liberalized residents' capital account transactions with the Southern African Development Community by allowing residents to purchase real estate and to do direct investment as well as to sell or issue collective investment schemes, bonds, and other debt securities, and shares or securities of a participating nature in Southern African Development Community countries. Residents of other Southern African Development Community countries were allowed access to Tanzania's domestic market to sell or issue as well as to purchase collective investment schemes, money market instruments, bonds, or other debt securities, and to sell or issue shares or securities of a participating nature. The requirement that these purchases are allowed only if funded fully by external sources or approved by the Bank of Tanzania does not apply if the purchase is within the Southern African Development Community. Nepal eased inflow by increasing the amount limit that resident individuals and entities can borrow abroad. Myanmar reduced the surrender requirement (both trade and nontrade) of foreign exchange earnings to banks, after previously imposing it during the year.

In 2023, there were 19 easing measures by Moldova (15) and 1 each by Bangladesh, Cambodia, Ethiopia, and Myanmar. Moldova eased capital inflows by allowing nonresidents to purchase government securities on the secondary market through the E-bond and Central Securities Depository system. Moldova also eased capital outflows by lifting the approval requirement for purchases by insurance or reinsurance companies and nonbank lending organizations of foreign financial instruments from nonresidents. Bangladesh increased the usance period for imports of industrial materials, agricultural implements, and chemical fertilizers under supplier/buyer credit. Cambodia lowered the reserve requirement on banks' external borrowing. Ethiopia eased restrictions by reducing surrender requirements to the central bank for all commercial banks' foreign exchange income, after previously increasing it during the year. Myanmar continued (from the previous year) to reduce surrender requirement of foreign exchange earnings to banks.

Provisions Specific to Commercial Banks and Institutional Investors

This section reviews developments in provisions specific to the financial sector; that is, commercial banks and institutional investors, with a focus on prudential measures that are also capital controls.[61] This category covers some monetary and prudential measures in addition to capital controls.[62] It includes, among other categories of financial institution transactions, borrowing abroad, lending to nonresidents, purchasing locally issued securities denominated in foreign exchange, and establishing regulations pertaining to banks' and institutional investors' investments. These provisions may be similar or identical to the measures described in the respective categories of controls on accounts, capital and money market instruments, credit operations, and direct investment if the same regulations apply to banks and institutional investors as to other residents. In such cases, the measure also appears in the relevant category in the sections on accounts and capital transactions.

Overall, in 2022, an almost equal number of easing and tightening measures were taken, similar to 2021. A total of 187 tightening or easing measures were implemented within the financial sector. This figure slightly surpasses the count of measures enacted in both 2019 and 2021, which were 172 and 164, respectively, yet falls short of the 240 measures imposed in 2020 (Figure 16).[63] Capital control measures hit their lowest level in 2022 compared to the period spanning 2019 to 2022, with most adjustments being relaxations, especially in terms of outflows as in 2021 (Figure 17, panel 1). However, capital control measures on banks and other credit institutions recorded a maximum in 2022. Although the analysis for 2023 does not encompass the entire year, the frequency of capital control measures in the financial sector was similar to that of 2022, yet the adjustments shifted to an even split between easing and tightening actions. As in previous years, in both 2022 and 2023, the predominant focus of the changes was on outflows. However, in 2023 the number of tightening measures was high on outflows, primarily owing to measures taken by Sri Lanka on institutional investors in response to its economic situation. The incidence of prudential measures in 2022 was significant, with tightening measures peaking within the 2019–23 timeframe (Figure 17, panel 2). As of 2023, the frequency of prudential measures appears elevated, already surpassing those in 2021 and 2019, with most being tightening measures. The high number of tightening prudential measures in 2022 and 2023 was driven by changes in reserves requirements, as countries were reversing reductions taken during the pandemic and in a tightening cycle fighting inflationary pressures.

In examining countries that implemented capital controls during 2022 and 2023, Ecuador led the group, accounting for 22 percent of the adjustments (24 out of 107; Figure 18, panel 1). This was followed by Ukraine and Sri Lanka, each with 13 changes in 2022 and 2023, respectively. Ecuador's adjustments pertained to the capital outflow tax, which saw a gradual reduction from 5 percent to 3.5 percent through successive amendments of 25 basis points.[64] The changes in Ukraine were primarily driven by the war, leading to a majority of the tightening measures on outflows, except two cases corresponding to exceptions applied to such tightening. Similarly, all of Sri Lanka's measures were tightening of outflows, reflecting the country's economic challenges. Iceland was the only advanced economy that implemented capital controls on the financial sector during 2022 and 2023.

[61] Capital controls and prudential measures are highly intertwined because of their overlapping application. For example, some prudential measures (such as different reserve requirements for deposit accounts held by residents and nonresidents) could also be regarded as capital controls because they distinguish between transactions with residents and nonresidents and hence influence capital flows.

[62] Inclusion of an entry in this category does not necessarily indicate that the aim of the measure is to control the flow of capital.

[63] The analysis in this section excludes neutral changes. Capital control neutral changes were 20 (all on outflows) and 0 in 2022 and 2023, respectively. Neutral changes for prudential measures were 25 and 23 in 2022 and 2023, respectively.

[64] The tax is included in four categories of this section and was reduced in six steps during 2022–23, resulting in 24 easing measures.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

In 2022 and 2023, a higher number of countries opted for prudential measures compared to capital control measures, with 63 countries implementing the former compared to 21 for the latter. Russia topped the list with 23 prudential measures (Figure 18, panel 2), followed by Peru with 13, the Republic of North Macedonia with 12, and Aruba with 11. During this period, advanced economies accounted for 11 percent of the prudential measure changes.

Commercial Banks and Other Credit Institutions

The number of capital controls affecting banks and other credit institutions recorded a maximum in 2022 (32; Figure 19, panel 1): 72 percent were easing measures, and 59 percent of the total were on outflows. So far, in 2023, 22 capital control changes were reported with most being easing measures, and 73 percent of the total changes were on inflows, in contrast to 2022.

The number of prudential measures in 2022 and 2023 recorded a high in comparison with pre- and post-pandemic years (2019 and 2021, respectively; Figure 19, panel 2). The number of tightening prudential measures was higher in 2022 (75) and 2023 (61) than previous years. Most of the tightening prudential measures were changes in reserves requirements (48 and 39 in 2022 and 2023, respectively), as countries were reversing reductions taken during the pandemic and in a tightening cycle fighting inflationary pressures.

Some notable country examples of changes to capital controls on banks and other credit institutions in 2022 and 2023 are the following:

- Controls on capital inflows (27 changes): In March 2022, Brazil reduced the tax on financial transactions (Imposto sobre Operações Financeiras) on external loans with maturity less than 180 days to 0 percent (previously 6 percent). In October 2022, China eliminated for overseas financial institutions as founders or strategic investors of a Chinese-funded commercial banking institution the requirement to have total year-end assets no less than $10 billion. In 2023, Bulgaria raised the percentage from 5 to 10 percent of the minimum required reserves on the funds attracted by banks from nonresidents, leveling the minimum required reserve rates for liabilities to nonresidents with the minimum required reserves for liabilities to residents, and China established an approval for commercial banks and other financial institutions borrowing loans from abroad with maturities of more than one year. In January 2023, Cambodia increased the banks' external borrowing reserve requirement from 7 to 9 percent, lowering it back to 7 percent in December 2023. In January 2023, to stimulate a change in the composition of credit institutions' foreign currency liabilities toward a higher proportion of friendly states' currencies, while maintaining conditions for a further overall decrease in the share of foreign currencies on the balance sheets of all credit institutions, the Bank of Russia introduced differentiated required reserve ratios for liabilities in unfriendly states' currencies or other foreign currencies: 7.5 percent (previously 7 percent) for all categories of reservable liabilities in unfriendly states' currencies and 5.5 percent (previously 7 percent) for all categories of reservable liabilities in all other foreign currencies. In June 2023, the reserve requirements for all categories of reservable liabilities in unfriendly states' currencies was increased to 8.5 percent and for all categories of reservable liabilities in all other foreign currencies to 6 percent.
- Controls on capital outflows (25): On the easing side, Brazil allowed financial institutions and other institutions authorized to operate by the Central Bank of Brazil to allocate, invest, and set aside the resources raised in the country and abroad for credits and financing operations. Previously, financial institutions were forbidden to remit abroad funds pooled in Brazil for lending, except for some official programs. China eliminated the approval requirement for domestic banks to conduct domestic and foreign currency cross-border financing within the established limits. Curaçao and Sint Maarten eliminated the limit of up to NA f.300,000 on outward transactions impacting banks' lending to nonresidents, as the final step in removing controls imposed due to the pandemic.[65] On the tightening side, Russia restricted loans in foreign currency to any nonresident, as well as for the provision of credits (in foreign currency and rubles) and loans (in rubles) to nonresidents from unfriendly countries by requiring a permit granted by the Government Commission on Monitoring Foreign Investment. Sri Lanka suspended payments through Outward [65] Residents (including banks) must request a license per transaction with a nonresident if the amount is NA f.150,000 or more.

Investment Accounts for the purpose of making overseas investments with some exceptions. And, Ukraine, due to the war, implemented the following banning measures for banks: (1) prepayments of foreign loans;[66] (2) credits to nonresidents, except to foreign financial institutions; and (3) granting loans in domestic currency to customers to repay the bank foreign exchange loans.

- Controls on capital inflows and outflows (2): Iceland replaced the ban on banks' derivative positions involving the Icelandic currency with limits on such activities.[67]

Most of the measures introduced in prudential regulations in the reporting period adjusted reserve requirements.

- Reserve requirements (120 changes): As noted earlier, increases in reserve requirements were a common policy in 2022 and 2023. Countries that tightened reserve requirements in 2022 on overall liabilities were Aruba, Costa Rica, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Seychelles, and Uganda; on domestic currency liabilities: Bahrain and Egypt; on foreign currency liabilities: Georgia, Haiti, and Republic of North Macedonia; and on both: Azerbaijan, Moldova, Mongolia, Peru, Russia, Suriname, and Türkiye. In 2023, countries that tightened reserve requirements on overall liabilities were Aruba, Rwanda, and United Arab Emirates; on foreign currency liabilities: Kyrgyz Republic, Lao P.D.R., and Republic of North Macedonia; and on both: Azerbaijan, Jamaica, Mozambique, Peru, Russia, Serbia, Suriname, Türkiye, and Ukraine.

Aruba (9), Indonesia (8), North Macedonia (10), and Peru (10) tightened their reserve requirements more than five times during 2022–23. Aruba increased reserve requirements above prepandemic levels to protect international reserves as it relaxed capital controls it had imposed at the start of the pandemic.[68] In addition, the increases aimed at fighting inflationary pressures and excess liquidity in the banking system. In September 2023, Aruba started reducing the reserve requirement. Indonesia tightened reserve requirements gradually in 2022 to fight inflationary pressures, for conventional and sharia banks—each four times. While tightening monetary policy, the Republic of North Macedonia increased the reserve requirement on foreign exchange deposits since June 2022 to incentivize the use of domestic currency. It also reduced on four occasions the percentage for the reserve requirement in euro that can be fulfilled in domestic currency after applying the reserve requirement rate on foreign currency liabilities. Peru complemented its hikes in the monetary policy rate with increases in reserve requirements for local currency liabilities and tightened the additional reserve requirement for foreign currency liabilities based on the stock of foreign currency loans in comparison to December 2018.

Other categories with a high number or changes were:

- Provisions specific to commercial banks and other credit institutions[69]: Most of the changes were tightening measures (12 out of 19). For example, Mexico incorporated the international total loss-absorbing capacity standard at a national level for credit institutions, updated the liquidity provisions and accounting criteria to make them consistent with the International Financial Reporting Standards, and strengthened the regulations surrounding electronic funds transfers. New Zealand returned the core funding ratio to 75 percent, tightened credit risk weights that apply to exposures of regulated banks to "connected persons," and introduced rules that provide for mutually structured regulated banks and nonbank deposit takers (credit unions, building societies, and cooperatives) to issue capital instruments that meet capital definitions for regulatory capital recognition.
- Liquid asset requirements: Most of the changes were easing (11 out of 16). Seven countries eased their liquid asset requirement. Jamaica reduced the liquid asset requirement for local and foreign currency liabilities in three occasions. Belarus reduced the liquidity coverage ratio to 80 percent and allowed systemically important banks to include an irrevocable credit line opened by the National Bank of the Republic of Belarus as part of the highly liquid assets for the liquidity coverage ratio calculation. Croatia reduced to 8.5 percent the foreign exchange liabilities that had to be covered by short-term foreign exchange assets with maturity of less than three months, and later eliminated this requirement.

[66] The measure restricts outflows, but because the measure is on borrowing from abroad, in the statistics it is counted as an "inflow control."

[67] This measure affects two categories: open foreign exchange position limits on resident assets and liabilities and open foreign exchange position limits on nonresident assets and liabilities.

[68] Reserve requirements in Aruba do not differentiate between domestic and foreign currency liabilities.

[69] This is a main category that includes measures that cannot be classified in the more specific subcategories.

- Interest rate controls: Three countries changed interest rate controls for a total of 14 changes. Russia implemented three easing and three tightening actions. Among these, it established a moratorium on the application of the total cost of credit limitation between March and June 2022, and reinstated it in August 2023. Between March and June 2023, Vietnam decreased the maximum rates on deposits (demand and below one-month term deposits, term deposits between one and six months) and on loans provided by banks and microfinance institutions. Botswana eliminated the maximum allowed interest rate on 91-day deposits.
- Lending locally in foreign exchange currency: Four out of the twelve changes were implemented by Russia. In January 2022, Russia imposed back the surcharges to risk ratios on foreign currency credits and investments to/in companies producing medicines and material and equipment used for medical purposes, which they had stopped applying in response to the pandemic. And, at the start of the war, Russia eliminated add-ons to risk ratios for banks' credit claims to legal entities in foreign currency that arose on or after February 28, 2022, and released the accumulated macroprudential capital buffer for claims that arose before this date on loans in foreign currency granted to legal entities and on investments in debt securities denominated in foreign currency and for unsecured consumer loans and mortgages in rubles and foreign currency. All other countries with changes in this category made one change only, with five tightening and three easing measures.

Institutional Investors

Capital controls for institutional investors recorded the lowest level in 2022 (23 changes) compared to 2019–21, with most being easing measures on outflows (Figure 20, panel 1), similar to past years. While not covering the entire year, 2023 registered a shift in the trend, with greater number of overall measures (30 changes) compared to 2022, and an even split between tightening and easing measures on outflows. The tightening measures were driven by the two measures imposed by Sri Lanka, which count as 12 changes (explained subsequently).

Some notable country examples of changes to controls on capital outflows on institutional investors in 2022 and 2023 are the following:[70]

- Easing of controls on capital outflows (32 changes): In January 2022, Curaçao and Sint Maarten eliminated for pension funds and insurance companies the limit on investments abroad up to a maximum of 0.25 percent of the provisions and liabilities recorded in 2019, and for investments companies the general limit of NA f.300,000 on residents' outward transactions, as the final steps in removing controls imposed due to the pandemic.[71] In June 2023, Fiji lifted the suspension on investment abroad imposed due to the pandemic.[72] In February 2022, South Africa increased the limit on foreign portfolio investments to 45 percent of total assets for insurance companies, pension funds, and investment companies from 40 percent for insurance companies and investment firms and from 30 percent for pension funds.
- Tightening of controls on capital outflows (21): On June 2023, in view of the liquidity issues in the domestic foreign exchange market, Sri Lanka suspended for six months with some exceptions the payments through Outward Investment Accounts for the purpose of making overseas investments. In addition, and also for six months, it limited outward remittances on capital transactions through Business Foreign Currency Accounts up to a maximum of $100,000 for the purpose of expanding their core business overseas.[73] At the onset of the war, Ukraine prohibited investment transactions abroad.[74]

[70] The section on controls on institutional investors in the AREAER focuses mostly on capital outflows. In 2022 and 2023, there were no changes on capital inflows.

[71] Each measure affected the limits on securities issued by nonresidents and limits on investment portfolio held abroad, so the three measures counted as six changes.

[72] This measure affected insurance companies', pension funds', and investment firms' limits on securities issued by nonresidents and limits on investment portfolio held abroad, therefore counting as six changes.

[73] These two measures affected insurance companies', pension funds', and investment firms' limits on securities issued by nonresidents and limits on investment portfolio held abroad, therefore counting as twelve changes.

Prudential measures affecting institutional investors were low in 2022 and 2023 (nine and three, respectively; Figure 20, panel 2), with most being tightening. Costa Rica, New Zealand, Portugal, the United Arab Emirates, and Uruguay each reported one tightening measure, while Australia and Montenegro reported two tightening measures. In July 2022, Australia imposed financial reporting obligations on registrable superannuation entities—consistent with those that apply to public companies and registered schemes—and a regulatory regime for a new type of collective investment fund known as corporate collective investment vehicle was introduced. Montenegro distinctly specified further the limits for assets for insurance companies. In contrast, Albania, Costa Rica, and Estonia eased prudential measures, each with one change in 2022.

Digital Currencies and Crypto Assets

A new section titled "Digital Currencies and Crypto Assets" was added to the AREAER template starting with this 2023 AREAER. The questions on this topic cover those that are relevant in the context of the AREAER, namely whether there are any administrative measures (capital controls) that restrict the cross-border use of these assets or how residents can access and use these assets for such transactions. The main objective is to gather and publish information on whether and what kind of capital controls or similar restrictions apply on the acquisition and use of these assets in member countries to help the membership obtaining information on this new, rapidly evolving area and inform analytical work and policy decisions. The relevance of this new section is underlined by some evidence in the literature that the use of such assets in cross-border transactions are increasing and that they are often used to circumvent capital controls on transactions using fiat money.[75]

[75] See, for example, Pamela Cardozo, Andrés Fernández, Jerzy Jang, and Felipe Rojas, forthcoming, "On Cross-Border Crypto Flows: Measurement, Drivers and Policy Implications," IMF Working Paper, International Monetary Fund, Washington, DC;

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

This new section is divided into five main subsections covering the following three broad topics: CBDC, crypto assets, and crypto exchanges and trading platforms. The questions on CBDC cover circulation of CBDCs, both launched domestically and by another jurisdiction and may be circulating in the reporting jurisdiction, controls on the use of domestic CBDC, and controls on CBDC launched by another jurisdiction. The questions on crypto assets are divided to capture controls on unbacked tokens, utility and security tokens, and stablecoins.[76] Questions include controls on residents' access and use of crypto assets, and the use of such assets between residents and nonresidents. In particular, questions for each of the three types of crypto assets include whether there are controls that affect the use of such assets for conducting current and capital account transactions. These questions mirror those in the section "Arrangements for Payments and Receipts" of the AREAER related to the use of domestic currency in the settlement of current and capital account transactions (see Country Table Matrix). The final subsection consists of two questions on controls on domestic crypto exchanges and residents' access to crypto exchange trading platforms. A total of 155 jurisdictions provided some responses to these new questions on digital currencies and crypto assets.

Three countries reported that a domestic CBDC was launched in their jurisdictions (the Bahamas, Jamaica, Nigeria). The Bahamas launched the SandDollar, a retail CBDC, in October 2020. Jamaica launched both a retail and wholesale CBDC in July 2022. Nigeria launched the eNaira, a retail CBDC, in October 2021. The Bahamas and Nigeria report controls on the use of their CBDC between residents and nonresidents. In addition, while no CBDC have been launched, both China and Russia report controls on the use of any domestic CBDC vis-à-vis its use between residents and nonresidents.

A majority of countries reported that they had no controls or had no regulations in place on the use of CBDCs launched by another jurisdiction (Figure 21). Eleven countries reported that there were some form of controls on CBDC launched by another jurisdiction. CBDCs launched by another jurisdiction appear to be less regulated than crypto assets (see the following discussion), likely because CBDCs are perceived as considerably less risky than crypto assets, as well as due to the very small number of such CBDCs that have been launched compared with the relatively more widespread use of crypto assets—thus, they are somewhat less of a concern for the authorities.

About half of the countries report that they have no controls or no regulations restricting the use of various types of tokens and stablecoins (Figure 22).[77] Approximately a quarter of the membership report some form of restrictions on the acquisition, and its use among residents and between residents and nonresidents. About half of these countries have imposed some form of prohibitions on the acquisition and use of tokens and stablecoins. A few countries report that financial institutions are prohibited, and others permit only licensed operators permitted to deal with crypto assets (such as virtual asset service providers) to transact with crypto

[76] Unbacked tokens have no backing assets, are usually issued in a decentralized manner, are transferable, have no redemption pledge, and provide no direct claims on the issuer. With no backing assets, unbacked tokens have volatile prices and are thus generally not well suited to perform the main functions of money: store of value, medium of exchange, and unit of account. Utility tokens are crypto assets that are usually centrally issued and provide the token holder with access to an existing or prospective product or service. These are usually limited to a single network (that is, the issuer), or a closed network linked to the issuer, and have limited transferability. Security tokens are crypto assets that are usually centrally issued, transferable, and meet the definition of a security within respective jurisdictions. A stablecoin is a crypto asset that aims to maintain a stable value relative to a specified asset, or a pool or basket of assets. A multicurrency stablecoin is a stablecoin denominated in or pegged to a basket of fiat currencies. A global stablecoin is a stablecoin with a potential reach and use across multiple jurisdictions and which could become systemically important in and across one or many jurisdictions, including as a means of making payments and/or store of value. See the AREAER Compilation Guide.

[77] Respondents were requested to respond with a "yes" status to indicate existence of a control as described or "no" if there were no restrictions on the specific transaction. The lack of any regulation could be indicated with "n.r" or if the transaction was possible because there was no regulation preventing it to respond with a "no," and if the transaction was not possible because there was no regulation to respond with "yes" to indicate controls on said transaction. In the event the respondent did not provide a response and left the existence of control blank, it was compiled as "n.a.," indicating information was not available at the time of publication. In some cases, the respondent chose to provide an "n.a." response.

assets. Only a very small percentage of advanced economies report some form of control across the three types of crypto assets captured in the survey and over 80 percent report no controls or that they do not regulate it (Figure 22), whereas about a quarter of EMDEs and low-income developing countries each report some form of controls. For the most part, those that responded that there were controls did not generally distinguish among the types of crypto assets but covered them broadly under the umbrella of crypto or digital or virtual assets, including those that imposed an overall prohibition or ban on such transactions.

Close to a third report some form of restriction on crypto exchanges and trading platforms, of which about a quarter indicate that such activity is prohibited. Just over half regulate the activity through approval requirement, licensing, or registration requirements.

Twenty jurisdictions reported changes in the regulatory framework related to digital currency and crypto assets during 2022–23. Most of these were on crypto assets, in part introducing regulation on virtual asset service providers through which such transactions should be routed, and in some cases to prohibit such transactions. Since this is a rapidly developing area, more changes can be expected going forward.

Compilation Guide[1]

Status Under IMF Articles of Agreement

Article VIII	The member country has accepted the obligations of Article VIII, Sections 2, 3, and 4, of the IMF's Articles of Agreement.
Article XIV	The member country continues to avail itself of the transitional arrangements of Article XIV, Section 2.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices	Exchange restrictions and multiple currency practices (MCPs) maintained by a member country under Article VIII, Sections 2, 3, and 4, or under Article XIV, Section 2, of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, as specified in the latest IMF staff reports issued as of December 31, 2022. Information on exchange restrictions and MCPs or on the nonexistence of exchange restrictions and MCPs for countries with unpublished IMF staff reports are published only with the consent of the authorities. If no consent has been received, the AREAER indicates that "Information is not publicly available." Hence, "Information is not publicly available" does not necessarily imply that the country maintains exchange restrictions or MCPs. It indicates only that the country's relevant IMF staff report has not been published and that the authorities have not consented to the publication of the information on the existence of exchange restrictions and MCPs. Because the relevant IMF staff report may refer to years before the reporting period for this volume of the AREAER; therefore, more recent changes in the exchange system may not be included here. Changes in the category "Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices" are reflected in the edition of the AREAER that covers the calendar year during which the IMF staff report including information on such changes is issued. Changes in these measures which give rise to exchange restrictions or MCPs and that affect other categories of the country tables are reported under the relevant categories in the AREAER, in accordance with the normal reporting periods.
Exchange measures imposed for security reasons	Exchange measures on payments and transfers in connection with international transactions imposed by member countries for reasons of national or international security.
In accordance with IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51)	Security restrictions on current international payments and transfers on the basis of IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51), which establishes the obligation of members to notify the IMF before imposing such restrictions, or, if circumstances preclude advance notification, as promptly as possible.
Other security restrictions	Other restrictions imposed for security reasons (e.g., in accordance with UN or EU regulations) but not notified to the IMF under Board Decision 144-(52/51).

Exchange Arrangement

Currency	The official legal tender of the country.
Other legal tender	The existence of another currency that is officially allowed to be used in the country.
Exchange rate structure	If there is one exchange rate, the system is called unitary. If there is more than one exchange rate that may be used simultaneously for different purposes and/or by different entities, and if these exchange rates give rise to MCPs or differing rates for current and capital transactions, the system is called dual or multiple. Different effective exchange rates resulting from exchange taxes or subsidies, excessive exchange rate spreads between buying and selling rates, bilateral payments agreements, and broken cross rates are not included in this category. Changes in measures within this category are reported in accordance with the normal reporting periods. Reclassification in cases related to changes in MCPs occurs in the edition of the AREAER, that covers the calendar year during which the IMF staff report that includes information on such changes is issued.

Classification

Describes and classifies the de jure and the de facto exchange rate arrangements.

De jure

The description and effective dates of the de jure exchange rate arrangements are provided by the authorities. By Article IV, Section 2(a) of the Fund's Articles of Agreement and Paragraph 25 of the 2012 Surveillance Decision No. 15203-(12/72), each member is required to notify the Fund of the exchange arrangements it intends to apply and to notify the Fund promptly of any changes in its exchange arrangements. Country authorities are also requested to identify, whenever possible, which of the existing categories of exchange rate arrangements below most closely corresponds to the de jure arrangement in effect. Country authorities may also wish to briefly describe their official exchange rate policy. The description includes officially announced or estimated parameters of the exchange arrangement (e.g., parity, bands, weights, rate of crawl, and other indicators used to manage the exchange rate). It also provides information on the computation of the exchange rate.

De facto

IMF staff classifies the de facto exchange rate arrangements according to the categories below. The name and the definition of the categories describing the de facto exchange rate arrangements have been modified in accordance with the revised classification methodology, as of February 1, 2009.[2] Where the description of the de jure arrangement can be empirically confirmed by the IMF staff over at least the previous six months, the exchange rate arrangement will be classified in the same way on a de facto basis.

Because the de facto methodology for classification of exchange rate regimes is based on a backward-looking approach that relies on past exchange rate movement and historical data, some countries are reclassified retroactively to a date when the behavior of the exchange rates changed and matched the criteria for reclassification to the appropriate category. For these countries, if the retroactive date of reclassification is prior to the period covered in this report, then the effective date of change to be entered in the country chapter and the changes section is deemed to be the first day of the year in which the decision of reclassification took place.

No separate legal tender

Classification as an exchange rate arrangement with no separate legal tender involves the confirmation of the country authorities' de jure exchange rate arrangement. The currency of another country circulates as the sole legal tender (formal dollarization).

Adopting such an arrangement implies the complete surrender by the monetary authorities of control over domestic monetary policy.

Exchange arrangements of countries that belong to a monetary or currency union in which the same legal tender is shared by the members of the union are classified under the arrangement governing the joint currency. This classification is based on the behavior of the common currency, whereas the previous classification was based on the lack of a separate legal tender. The classification thus reflects only a definitional change and is not based on a judgment that there has been a substantive change in the exchange arrangement or in other policies of the currency union or its members.

[2] For further details see IMF Working Paper 09/211.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Currency board	Classification as a currency board involves the confirmation of the country authorities' de jure exchange rate arrangement. A currency board arrangement is a monetary arrangement based on an explicit legislative commitment to exchange domestic currency for a specified foreign currency at a fixed exchange rate, combined with restrictions on the issuing authority to ensure the fulfillment of its legal obligation. This implies that domestic currency is usually fully backed by foreign assets, eliminating traditional central bank functions such as monetary control and lender-of-last-resort and leaving little scope for discretionary monetary policy. Some flexibility may still be afforded, depending on the strictness of the banking rules of the currency board arrangement.
Conventional peg	Classification as a conventional peg involves the confirmation of the country authorities' de jure exchange rate arrangement. For this category the country formally (de jure) pegs its currency at a fixed rate to another currency or basket of currencies, where the basket is formed, for example, from the currencies of major trading or financial partners and weights reflect the geographic distribution of trade, services, or capital flows. The anchor currency or basket weights are public or notified to the IMF. The country authorities stand ready to maintain the fixed parity through direct intervention (i.e., via sale or purchase of foreign exchange in the market) or indirect intervention (e.g., via exchange rate related use of interest rate policy, imposition of foreign exchange regulations, exercise of moral suasion that constrains foreign exchange activity, or intervention by other public institutions). There is no commitment to irrevocably keep the parity, but the formal arrangement must be confirmed empirically: the exchange rate may fluctuate within narrow margins of less than ±1% around a central rate or the maximum and minimum value of the spot market exchange rate must remain within a narrow margin of 2% for at least six months.
Stabilized arrangement	Classification as a stabilized arrangement entails a spot market exchange rate that remains within a margin of 2% for six months or more (with the exception of a specified number of outliers or step adjustments) and is not floating. The required margin of stability can be met either with respect to a single currency or a basket of currencies, where the anchor currency or the basket is ascertained or confirmed using statistical techniques. Classification as a stabilized arrangement requires that the statistical criteria are met and that the exchange rate remains stable as a result of official action (including structural market rigidities). The classification does not imply a policy commitment on the part of the country authorities.
Crawling peg	Classification as a crawling peg involves the confirmation of the country authorities' de jure exchange rate arrangement. The currency is adjusted in small amounts at a fixed rate or in response to changes in selected quantitative indicators, such as past inflation differentials vis-à-vis major trading partners or differentials between the inflation target and expected inflation in major trading partners. The rate of crawl can be set to generate inflation-adjusted changes in the exchange rate (backward looking) or set at a predetermined fixed rate and/or below the projected inflation differentials (forward looking). The rules and parameters of the arrangement are public or notified to the IMF.
Crawl-like arrangement	For classification as a crawl-like arrangement, the exchange rate must remain within a narrow margin of 2% relative to a statistically identified trend for six months or more (with the exception of a specified number of outliers) and the exchange rate arrangement cannot be considered as floating. Normally, a minimum rate of change greater than allowed under a stabilized (peg-like) arrangement is required. However, an arrangement will be considered crawl-like with an annualized rate of change of at least 1%, provided that the exchange rate appreciates or depreciates in a sufficiently monotonic and continuous manner.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Pegged exchange rate within horizontal bands	Classification as a pegged exchange rate within horizontal bands involves the confirmation of the country authorities' de jure exchange rate arrangement. The value of the currency is maintained within certain margins of fluctuation of at least ±1% around a fixed central rate, or the margin between the maximum and minimum value of the exchange rate exceeds 2%. It includes arrangements of countries in the ERM of the European Monetary System (EMS), which was replaced with the ERM II on January 1, 1999, for those countries with margins of fluctuation wider than ±1%. The central rate and width of the band are public or notified to the IMF.
Other managed arrangement	This category is a residual and is used when the exchange rate arrangement does not meet the criteria for any of the other categories. Arrangements characterized by frequent shifts in policies may fall into this category.
Floating	A floating exchange rate is largely market determined, without an ascertainable or predictable path for the rate. In particular, an exchange rate that satisfies the statistical criteria for a stabilized or a crawl-like arrangement will be classified as such unless it is clear that the stability of the exchange rate is not the result of official actions. Foreign exchange market intervention may be either direct or indirect, and such intervention serves to moderate the rate of change and prevent undue fluctuations in the exchange rate, but policies targeting a specific level of the exchange rate are incompatible with floating. Indicators for managing the rate are broadly judgmental (e.g., balance of payments position, international reserves, parallel market developments). Floating arrangements may exhibit more or less exchange rate volatility, depending on the size of the shocks affecting the economy.
Free floating	A floating exchange rate can be classified as free floating if intervention occurs only exceptionally and aims to address disorderly market conditions and if the authorities have provided information or data confirming that intervention has been limited to at most three instances in the previous six months, each lasting no more than three business days. If the information or data required are not available to the IMF staff, the arrangement will be classified as floating. Detailed data on intervention or official foreign exchange transactions will not be requested routinely from member countries, but only when other information available to IMF staff is insufficient to resolve uncertainties about the appropriate classification.
Official exchange rate	Provides information on the computation of the exchange rate and the use of the official exchange rate (accounting, customs valuation purposes, foreign exchange transactions with the government).
Monetary policy framework	The category includes a brief description of the monetary policy framework in effect according to the following subcategories:
Exchange rate anchor	The monetary authority buys or sell foreign exchange to maintain the exchange rate at its predetermined level or within a range. The exchange rate thus serves as the nominal anchor or intermediate target of monetary policy. These frameworks are associated with exchange rate arrangements with no separate legal tender, currency board arrangements, pegs (or stabilized arrangements) with or without bands, crawling pegs (or crawl-like arrangements), and other managed arrangements.
U.S. dollar	The U.S dollar is the nominal anchor or the only legal tender.
Euro	The euro is the nominal anchor or the only legal tender.
Composite	A currency composite consisting of two or more currencies is the nominal anchor.
Other	A currency other than the U.S dollar and the euro is the nominal anchor or the only legal tender.
Monetary aggregate target	The intermediate target of monetary policy is a monetary aggregate such as M0, M1, or M2, although the country may also set targets for inflation. The central bank may use a quantity (central bank reserves or base money) or price variable (policy rate) as operational target.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Inflation-targeting framework	This involves the public announcement of numerical targets for inflation, with an institutional commitment by the monetary authority to achieve these targets, typically over a medium-term horizon. Additional key features normally include increased communication with the public and the markets about the plans and objectives of monetary policymakers and increased accountability of the central bank for achieving its inflation objectives. Monetary policy decisions are often guided by the deviation of forecasts of future inflation from the announced inflation target, with the inflation forecast acting (implicitly or explicitly) as the intermediate target of monetary policy.
Target setting body	The official body or organizational unit responsible for setting and/or adjusting the inflation targets.
Inflation target	The numerical targets for inflation which have been publicly announced by the Central Bank. Inflation targets are generally expressed as i) a point target, ii) targets with plus minus a certain numerical limit, and iii) as a band or range. The target measure is defined in terms of end-year inflation or as average annual inflation. CPI and core CPI are based on national definitions, which may vary from country to country. Target horizon is the term in years of inflation targets as publicly announced by the Central Bank.
Operating target (policy rate)	Policy rate is used as the operating target of the monetary policy to achieve the inflation target. Short-term policy interest rate target (for example, overnight, one week, two weeks, etc.) is generally expressed as i) a point target, ii) target with a certain numerical limit above and below the target, and iii) as a band or range (upper and lower limits).
Accountability	Accountability framework that requires the central bank to explain its conduct of monetary policy in the pursuit of achieving its inflation target. For example, the governor or representatives of the central bank are required to appear before Parliament or one of its committees to explain actions and views on monetary policy and economic developments. It may also require reporting inflation targets through Open letters on monetary policy. Usually written by the Governor on behalf of the Monetary Policy Committee to the government in the event that inflation misses the inflation target by a pre-specified amount.
Transparency	The manner and level of detail how monetary policy decisions are communicated to the public. Institutional transparency is gauged by the communication vehicles employed by the central bank, including the release of inflation reports and the frequency and detail of these reports, the announcement of changes in the stance of monetary policy via press release, reviews of inflation performance and changes in monetary policy, the publication of inflation forecasting models, and the use of media and other public presentations.
Other monetary framework	The country has no explicitly stated nominal anchor, but rather monitors various indicators in conducting monetary policy. This category is also used when no relevant information on the country is available.
Exchange tax	Foreign exchange transactions are subject to a special tax. Bank commissions charged on foreign exchange transactions are not included in this category; rather, they are listed under the exchange arrangement classification.
Exchange subsidy	Foreign exchange transactions are subsidized by using separate, nonmarket exchange rates.
Foreign exchange market	The existence of a foreign exchange market.
Spot exchange market	Institutional setting of the foreign exchange market for spot transactions and market participants. Existence and significance of the parallel market.

Operated by the central bank

The role of the central bank in providing access to foreign exchange to market participants through a foreign exchange standing facility, allocation of foreign exchange to authorized dealers, or other legal and private persons, and the management of buy or sell auctions or fixing sessions. Price determination and frequency of central bank operations.

A foreign exchange standing facility allows market participants to buy foreign exchange from or sell it to the central bank at predetermined exchange rates at their own initiative and is usually instrumental in maintaining a hard or soft peg arrangement. The credibility of the facility depends to a large extent on the availability of foreign exchange reserves to back the facility.

Allocation involves redistribution of foreign exchange inflows by the central bank to market participants for specific international transactions or in specific amounts (rationing). Foreign exchange allocation is often used to provide foreign exchange for strategic imports such as oil or food when foreign exchange reserves are scarce. In an allocation system, companies and individuals often transact directly with the central bank, and commercial banks may buy foreign exchange only for their clients' underlying international transactions. Purchases of foreign exchange for the banks' own books typically are not permitted.

Auctions are organized by the central bank, usually for market participants to buy and /or sell foreign exchange. They can take the form of multiple-price auctions (all successful bidders pay the price they offer) or single-price auctions (all successful bidders pay the same price, which is the market-clearing/cut-off price). The authorities may exercise discretion in accepting or rejecting offers, and sometimes a floor price is determined in advance, below which offers are not accepted. The frequency of auctions depends mainly on the amount or availability of foreign exchange to be auctioned and on the role the auction plays in the foreign exchange market.

Fixing sessions are often organized by the central bank at the early stage of market development to establish a market-clearing exchange rate. The central bank monitors the market closely and often actively participates in price formation by selling or buying during the session to achieve a certain exchange rate target. The price determined at the fixing session is often used for foreign exchange transactions outside the session and/or for accounting and valuation purposes.

Interbank market

The organization and operation of the interbank market or interventions. Existence of brokerage, over the counter, and market-making arrangements.

Forward exchange market

The existence of a forward exchange market and the institutional arrangement and market participants.

Official cover of forward operations

An official entity (the central bank or the government) assumes the exchange risk of certain foreign exchange transactions.

Arrangements for Payments and Receipts

Prescription of currency requirements

The official requirements affecting the selection of currency and the method of settlement for transactions with other countries. When a country has payments agreements with other countries, the terms of these agreements often lead to a prescription of currency for specified categories of payments to, and receipts from, the countries concerned. This category includes information on the use of domestic currency in transactions between residents and nonresidents, both domestically and abroad; it also indicates any restrictions on the use of foreign currency among residents.

Payments arrangements

Bilateral payments arrangements

Two countries have an agreement to prescribe specific rules for payments to each other, including cases in which private parties are also obligated to use specific currencies. These agreements can be either operative or inoperative.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Regional arrangements	More than two parties participate in a payments agreement.
Clearing agreements	The official bodies of two or more countries agree to offset with some regularity the balances that arise from payments to each other as a result of the exchange of goods, services, or—less often—capital.
Barter agreements and open accounts	The official bodies of two or more countries agree to offset exports of goods and services to one country with imports of goods and services from the same country, without payment.
Administration of control	The authorities' division of responsibility for monitoring policy, administering exchange controls, and determining the extent of delegation of powers to outside agencies (banks are often authorized to effect foreign exchange transactions).
Payments arrears	Official or private residents of a member country default on their payments or transfers in foreign exchange to nonresidents. This category includes only the situation in which domestic currency is available for residents to settle their debts but they are unable to obtain foreign exchange—for example, because of the presence of an officially announced or unofficial queuing system; it does not cover nonpayment by private parties owing to bankruptcy.
Controls on trade in gold (coins and/or bullion)	Separate rules for trading in gold domestically and with foreign countries.
Controls on exports and imports of banknotes	Regulations governing the physical movement of means of payment between countries. Where information is available, the category distinguishes between separate limits for the (1) export and import of banknotes by travelers and (2) export and import of banknotes by banks and other authorized financial institutions.

Resident Accounts

Indicates whether resident accounts that are maintained in the national currency or in foreign currency, locally or abroad, are allowed and describes how they are treated and the facilities and limitations attached to such accounts. When there is more than one type of resident account, the nature and operation of the various types of accounts are also described; for example, whether residents are allowed to open foreign exchange accounts with or without approval from the exchange control authority, whether these accounts may be held domestically or abroad, and whether the balances on accounts held by residents in domestic currency may be converted into foreign currency.

Nonresident Accounts

Indicates whether local nonresident accounts maintained in the national currency or in foreign currency are allowed and describes how they are treated and the facilities and limitations attached to such accounts. When there is more than one type of nonresident account, the nature and operation of the various types of accounts are described.

Blocked accounts	Accounts of nonresidents, usually in domestic currency. Regulations prohibit or limit the conversion and/or transfer of the balances of such accounts.

Imports and Import Payments

Describes the nature and extent of exchange and trade restrictions on imports.

Foreign exchange budget	Information on the existence of a foreign exchange plan, i.e., prior allocation of a certain amount of foreign exchange, usually on an annual basis, for the importation of specific types of goods and/or services. In some cases, also covers differentiations among individual importers.
Financing requirements for imports	Information on specific import-financing regulations limiting the rights of residents to enter into private contracts in which the financing options differ from those in the official regulations.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Documentation requirements for release of foreign exchange for imports
Domiciliation requirements	The obligation to domicile the transactions with a specified (usually domestic) financial institution.
Preshipment inspection	Most often a compulsory government measure aimed at establishing the veracity of the import contract in terms of volume, quality, and price.
Letters of credit	Parties are obligated to use letters of credit (LCs) as a form of payment for their imports.
Import licenses used as exchange licenses	Import licenses are used not for trade purposes but instead to restrict the availability of foreign exchange for legitimate trade.
Import licenses and other nontariff measures
Positive list	A list of goods that may be imported.
Negative list	A list of goods that may not be imported.
Open general licenses	Indicates arrangements whereby certain imports or other international transactions are exempt from the restrictive application of licensing requirements.
Licenses with quotas	Refers to situations in which a license for the importation of a certain good is granted, but a specific limit is imposed on the amount to be imported.
Other nontariff measures	May include prohibitions on imports of certain goods from all countries or of all goods from a certain country. Several other nontariff measures are used by countries (e.g., phytosanitary examinations, setting of standards), but these are not covered fully in the report.
Import taxes and/or tariffs	A brief description of the import tax and tariff system, including taxes levied on the foreign exchange made available for imports.
Taxes collected through the exchange system	Indicates if any taxes apply to the exchange side of an import transaction.
State import monopoly	Private parties are not allowed to engage in the importation of certain products, or they are limited in their activity.

Exports and Export Proceeds

	Describes restrictions on the use of export proceeds, as well as regulations on exports.
Repatriation requirements	The obligation of exporters to repatriate export proceeds.
Surrender requirements
Surrender to the central bank	Regulations requiring the recipient of repatriated export proceeds to sell, sometimes at a specified exchange rate, any foreign exchange proceeds in return for local currency to the central bank.
Surrender to authorized dealers	Regulations requiring the recipient of repatriated export proceeds to sell, sometimes at a specified exchange rate, any foreign exchange proceeds in return for local currency to commercial banks or exchange dealers authorized for this purpose or on a foreign exchange market.
Financing requirements	Information on specific export-financing regulations limiting the rights of residents to enter into private contracts in which the financing options differ from those in the official regulations.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Documentation requirements	The same categories as in the case of imports are used.
Export licenses	Restrictions on the right of residents to export goods. These restrictions may take the form of quotas (where a certain quantity of shipment abroad is allowed) or the absence of quotas (where the licenses are issued at the discretion of the foreign trade control authority).
Export taxes	A brief description of the export tax system, including any taxes that are levied on foreign exchange earned by exporters.

Payments for Invisible Transactions and Current Transfers

Describes the procedures for effecting payments abroad in connection with current transactions in invisibles, with reference to prior approval requirements, the existence of quantitative and indicative limits, and/or bona fide tests. Detailed information on the most common categories of transactions is provided only when regulations differ for the various categories. Indicative limits establish maximum amounts up to which the purchase of foreign exchange is allowed upon declaration of the nature of the transaction, mainly for statistical purposes. Amounts above those limits are granted if the bona fide nature of the transaction is established by the presentation of appropriate documentation. Bona fide tests also may be applied to transactions for which quantitative limits have not been established.

Trade-related payments	Includes freight and insurance (including possible regulations on non-trade-related insurance payments and transfers), unloading and storage costs, administrative expenses, commissions, and customs duties and fees.
Investment-related payments	Includes profits and dividends, interest payments (including interest on debentures, mortgages, etc.), amortization of loans or depreciation of foreign direct investments, and payments and transfers of rent.
Payments for travel	Includes international travel for business, tourism, etc.
Personal payments	Includes medical expenditures abroad, study expenses abroad, pensions (including regulations on payments and transfers of pensions by both state and private pension providers on behalf of nonresidents, as well as the transfer of pensions due to residents living abroad), and family maintenance and alimony (including regulations on payments and transfers abroad of family maintenance and alimony by residents).
Foreign workers' wages	Transfer abroad of earnings by nonresidents working in the country.
Credit card use abroad	Use of credit and debit cards to pay for invisible transactions.
Other payments	Includes subscription and membership fees, authors' royalties, consulting and legal fees, etc.

Proceeds from Invisible Transactions and Current Transfers

Describes regulations governing exchange receipts derived from transactions in invisibles—including descriptions of any limitations on their conversion into domestic currency—and the use of those receipts.

Repatriation requirements	The definitions of repatriation and surrender requirements are similar to those applied to export proceeds.
Surrender requirements
Surrender to the central bank
Surrender to authorized dealers
Restrictions on use of funds	Refers mainly to the limitations imposed on the use of receipts previously deposited in certain types of bank accounts.

Capital Transactions

Describes regulations influencing both inward and outward capital flows. The concept of controls on capital transactions is interpreted broadly. Thus, controls on capital transactions include prohibitions; need for prior approval, authorization, and notification; dual and multiple exchange rates; discriminatory taxes; and reserve requirements or interest penalties imposed by the authorities that regulate the conclusion or execution of transactions or transfers; or the holding of assets at home by nonresidents and abroad by residents. The coverage of the regulations applies to receipts as well as to payments and to actions initiated by nonresidents and residents. In addition, because of the close association with capital transactions, information is also provided on local financial operations conducted in foreign currency, describing specific regulations in force that limit residents' and nonresidents' issuing of securities denominated in foreign currency or, generally, limitations on contract agreements expressed in foreign exchange.

Repatriation requirements	The definitions of repatriation and surrender requirements are similar to those applied to export proceeds.
Surrender requirements
Surrender to the central bank
Surrender to authorized dealers
Controls on capital and money market instruments	Refers to public offerings or private placements on primary markets or their listing on secondary markets.
On capital market securities	Refers to shares and other securities of a participating nature and to bonds and other securities with an original maturity of more than one year.

Investments for the purpose of acquiring a lasting economic interest are addressed under foreign direct investments.
Bonds or other debt securities	Refers to bonds and other securities with an original maturity of more than one year. The term "other securities" includes notes and debentures.
On money market instruments	Refers to securities with an original maturity of one year or less and includes short-term instruments such as certificates of deposit and bills of exchange. The category also includes treasury bills and other short-term government paper, bankers' acceptances, commercial papers, interbank deposits, and repurchase agreements.
On collective investment securities	Includes share certificates and registry entries or other evidence of investor interest in an institution for collective investment such as mutual funds, and unit and investment trusts.
Controls on derivatives and other instruments	Refers to operations in other negotiable instruments and nonsecured claims not covered under the above subsections. These may include operations in rights; warrants; financial options and futures; secondary market operations in other financial claims (including sovereign loans, mortgage loans, commercial credits, negotiable instruments originating as loans, receivables, and discounted bills of trade); forward operations (including those in foreign exchange); swaps of bonds and other debt securities; credits and loans; and other swaps (e.g., interest rate, debt/equity, equity/debt, foreign currency, as well as swaps of any of the instruments listed above). Also included are controls on operations in foreign exchange without any other underlying transaction (e.g., spot or forward trading on the foreign exchange markets, forward cover operations, etc.).

Controls on credit operations
Commercial credits	Covers operations directly linked with international trade transactions or with the rendering of international services.
Financial credits	Includes credits other than commercial credits granted by all residents, including banks, to nonresidents or vice versa.
Guarantees, sureties, and financial backup facilities	Includes guarantees, sureties, and financial backup facilities provided by residents to nonresidents and vice versa. Also includes securities pledged for payment or performance of a contract—such as warrants, performance bonds, and standby letters of credit—and financial backup facilities that are credit facilities used as a guarantee for independent financial operations.
Controls on direct investment	Refers to investments for the purpose of establishing lasting economic relations both abroad by residents and domestically by nonresidents. These investments are essentially for the purpose of producing goods and services, in particular, investments that allow investor participation in the management of the enterprise. The category includes the creation or extension of a wholly owned enterprise, subsidiary, or branch and the acquisition of full or partial ownership of a new or existing enterprise that results in effective influence over the operations of the enterprise.
Controls on liquidation of direct investment	Refers to the transfer of principal, including the initial capital and capital gains, of a foreign direct investment as defined above.
Controls on real estate transactions	Refers to the acquisition of real estate not associated with direct investment, including, for example, investments of a purely financial nature in real estate or the acquisition of real estate for personal use.
Controls on personal capital transactions	Covers transfers initiated on behalf of private persons and intended to benefit other private persons. Includes transactions involving property to which the promise of a return to the owner with payments of interest is attached (e.g., loans or settlements of debt in their country of origin by immigrants), and transfers effected free of charge to the beneficiary (e.g., gifts and endowments, loans, inheritances and legacies, or emigrants' assets).
	Provisions Specific to the Financial Sector
Provisions specific to commercial banks and other credit institutions	Describes regulations specific to these institutions, such as monetary, prudential, and foreign exchange controls. Inclusion of an entry in this category does not necessarily signify that the aim of the measure is to control the flow of capital. Some of these items (e.g., borrowing abroad, lending to nonresidents, purchase of locally issued securities denominated in foreign exchange, investment regulations) may be repetitions of the entries under respective categories of controls on capital and money market instruments, credit operations, or direct investments when the same regulations apply to commercial banks as well as to other residents.
Open foreign exchange position limits	Describes regulations on certain commercial bank balance sheet items (including capital) and on limits covering commercial banks' positions in foreign currencies (including gold).
Provisions specific to institutional investors	Describes controls specific to institutions, such as insurance companies, pension funds, investment firms (including brokers, dealers, or advisory firms), and other securities firms (including collective investment funds). Incorporates measures that impose limitations on the composition of the institutional investors' foreign or foreign currency assets (reserves, accounts) and liabilities (e.g., investments in equity capital of institutional investors or borrowing from nonresidents) and/or that differentiate between residents and nonresidents. Examples of such controls are restrictions on investments because of rules regarding the technical, mathematical, security, or mandatory reserves; solvency margins; premium reserve stocks; or guarantee funds of nonbank financial institutions. Inclusion of an entry in this category does not necessarily signify that the aim of the measure is to control the flow of capital.

Insurance companies
Pension funds
Investment firms and collective investment funds.

Digital Currencies and Crypto Assets

Circulation of domestic central bank digital currency (CBDC)—retail and/or wholesale	Describes whether a domestic CBDC has been launched in the reporting jurisdiction. CBDC is a form of money, issued digitally by the central bank and intended to serve as legal tender. It differs, however, from other forms of money typically issued by central banks: cash and reserve balances. CBDC may be designed for wholesale and retail payments. It could be widely accessible to a country's residents—and potentially to individuals and organizations abroad. CBDC could be used as easily for person-to-person, person-to-business, and business-to- business transactions of any amount. See Casting Light on Central Bank Digital Currencies
CBDC launched by another jurisdiction in circulation—retail and/or wholesale	Describes whether CBDCs launched in other jurisdictions are legally permitted to circulate in the reporting jurisdiction.
Controls on the use of domestic CBDC—retail and/or wholesale	Describes regulations and controls on the acquisition, holding, trading or use in anyway of domestic CBDC among residents, between residents and nonresidents, and among nonresidents.
Controls on CBDC launched by another jurisdiction	Describes regulations and controls on the acquisition, holding, trading or use in anyway of CBDC launched by other jurisdictions among residents and between residents and nonresidents. Controls may include limitations on the direct acquisition of or obtaining foreign exchange for the purpose of acquiring CBDCs launched by other jurisdictions.
Crypto assets	Crypto assets, encompass many different products, are privately issued digital representations of value that are cryptographically secured and deployed using distributed ledger technology. These include unbacked tokens, stablecoins and other assets. See Elements of Effective Policies for Crypto Assets.
Controls on unbacked tokens	Describes regulations and controls on the acquisition, holding, trading or use in anyway of unbacked tokens among residents and between nonresidents. Controls may include limitations on the direct acquisition of or obtaining foreign exchange for the purpose of acquiring unbacked tokens. Unbacked tokens have no backing assets, are usually issued in a decentralized manner, are transferable, have no redemption pledge, and provide no direct claims on the issuer. With no backing assets, unbacked tokens have volatile prices, and are thus generally not well suited to perform the main functions of money: store of value, medium of exchange, and unit of account. Instead, they are mostly held in the hope that prices will rise. See Elements of Effective Policies for Crypto Assets and Regulating the Crypto Ecosystem: The Case of Unbacked Crypto Assets.

Controls on utility and security tokens	Describes regulations and controls on the acquisition, holding, trading or use in anyway of utility and security tokens among residents and between residents and nonresidents. Controls may include limitations on the direct acquisition of or obtaining foreign exchange for the purpose of acquiring utility and security tokens. Utility tokens are crypto assets that are usually centrally issued and provide the token holder with access to an existing or prospective product or service. These are usually limited to a single network (that is, the issuer), or a closed network linked to the issuer, and have limited transferability. Use cases include loyalty programs and access to pre-launch discounts. Security tokens are crypto assets that are usually centrally issued, transferable, and meet the definition of a security within respective jurisdictions. Their use cases include tokenized equities, fractionalized non-fungible tokens, and initial coin offerings. See Elements of Effective Policies for Crypto Assets.
Controls on stablecoins	Describes regulations and controls on the acquisition, holding, trading or use in anyway of stablecoins among residents and between residents and nonresidents. Controls may include limitations on the direct acquisition of or obtaining foreign exchange for the purpose of acquiring stablecoins. A stablecoin is a crypto-asset that aims to maintain a stable value relative to a specified asset, or a pool or basket of assets. A multi-currency stablecoin is a stablecoin denominated in or pegged to a basket of fiat currencies. A global stablecoin (GSC) is a stablecoin with a potential reach and use across multiple jurisdictions and which could become systemically important in and across one or many jurisdictions, including as a means of making payments and/or store of value. See Review of the FSB High-level Recommendations of the Regulation, Supervision and Oversight of "Global Stablecoin" Arrangements: Consultative report.
Controls on crypto exchanges and trading platforms	Describes regulations and controls on the establishment and operations of domestic crypto exchanges and/or trading platforms or on local operations of foreign crypto exchanges/trading platforms. Include information on controls on the use by residents of such exchanges/platforms to acquire, hold and trade crypto assets. Crypto-trading platforms typically execute and receive orders from investors for the "exchange" or secondary market sale or purchase of crypto assets against fiat currency or other crypto assets. Crypto-trading platforms may provide brokerage services to retail investors in a manner similar to that of stock brokerage firms. However, unlike many stock brokerage firms, which can just pass the client orders to a stock exchange, crypto-trading platforms generally need to provide liquidity to support the transactions among their client investors (by selling their own inventories to match purchase orders from their clients). Crypto-trading platforms may also perform other functions, including custody (similar to wallet providers) and margin lending and provision of liquidity. Many crypto-trading platforms may also provide margin trading and financing platforms to investors (for example, Coincheck, Bitfinex). Trading platforms may also play the role of underwriters in initial coin offerings. See Regulation of Crypto Assets.

Crawl-like arrangement	Yes.	The de jure exchange rate arrangement is managed floating. The Da Afghanistan Bank (DAB) deals with ADs only through the auction. The primary goal of these auctions is to regulate the growth of reserve money and/or currency in circulation. Subject to meeting this goal, the DAB also seeks to minimize intra-auction exchange rate volatility. The de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as crawl-like. This classification is based on the information as of end-April 2021.

Official exchange rate	Yes.	The DAB reports official exchange rates of the Afghani vis-à-vis ten major currencies. The DAB staff conducts an online foreign exchange rate survey of between 40 and 50 licensed exchange dealers in Kabul at the start of each business day and acquires data on buying and selling rates for the nine currencies. The DAB's official reference rates are then determined as the average of the market rates for each currency. The official exchange rate is provided as a daily benchmark or reference point for commercial banks, private sector entities, and government agencies to use in their transactions.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices	Yes.	The IMF staff report for the 2022 Article IV Consultation with Albania states that, as of November 14, 2022, Albania continues to maintain an exchange restriction in the form of outstanding debit balances on inoperative bilateral payment agreements with two IMF member countries. Those debit balances were in place before Albania became an IMF member in 1991 and relate to debt in nonconvertible and formerly nonconvertible currencies. Despite repeated efforts by the Albanian authorities, no agreement has been reached with the counterparties. (Country Report No. 22/362)

Other managed arrangement
Floating	Yes.	The de jure exchange rate arrangement is free floating. The Bank of Albania (BOA) does not target any level or band for the exchange rate. The BOA interventions in the foreign exchange market are limited to the following situations: (1) maintaining adequate levels of foreign reserves; (2) avoiding harmful short-term fluctuations in the market; and (3) meeting monetary policy or financial stability objective when such interventions are deemed crucial. Excess volatility in the domestic foreign exchange market is considered on a case-by-case basis by the Committee for Implementing and Advising the Monetary Policy. The BOA uses auctions only for the purpose of accumulating foreign exchange reserves in small amount and based on a pre-announced schedule. When the BOA intervenes in the domestic foreign exchange market, its counterparties are the commercial banks; if necessary, it may carry out its intervention with foreign exchange bureaus. The BOA intervenes through (1) verbal intervention, in the form of press releases in the print or electronic media and/or press conferences and (2) transactional intervention. The latter can take two forms, direct intervention and intervention via pre-announced auctions. In the case of direct intervention, the exchange rate is determined by commercial banks' quotes and the BOA Monetary Operations Department's quotes. When the intervention exchange rate is uniform for all counterparties, the BOA publishes that rate on its Reuters page and simultaneously communicates the rate to commercial banks that do not participate in the Reuters system and to foreign exchange bureaus with which it has contact. When different exchange rates are used, the BOA announces only the fact that it has intervened. It publishes with a three-month lag the amount of the intervention in a quarterly bulletin that summarizes its foreign exchange operations with banks and the public sector. The regulation regarding foreign exchange interventions includes the option to carry out transactional interventions via auctions announced in advance with the aim of increasing/decreasing the reserves. The BOA announces the date, amount, and currency it wants to buy at least one month before the auction, and the banks submit up to 3 bids with no limitation of the amount. The BOA decides how much to buy based on the rates offered and its target amount. Following the auction, the BOA publishes the amount offered by commercial banks, the amount accepted by the BOA, the range of offered bids, the range of accepted bids, and the prorate at the maximum accepted bid. The BOA aims to avoid disruptions from large and irregular demand of foreign exchange by MOF, to better manage liquidity. The Ministry of Finance and Economy has not conducted outright purchases of foreign exchange in the market via auctions since 2014. The BOA offers a euro/Albanian lek (EUR/ALL) swap facility for the Ministry of Finance and Economy to be able to use foreign exchange cash balances for lek payments. The swap is priced on the basis of the interest rate differential between the foreign currency and ALL. In the last years, the BOA's interventions to manage the level of foreign reserves are guided by a framework incorporating also an optimization model, which accounts for the macroeconomic and financial conditions and the opportunity cost of holding reserves. At the end of each year, the BOA publishes a calendar of the interventions for the upcoming year, announcing the dates and the volumes of such interventions. The BOA briefly intervened a small amount (10.7 million euro) in the foreign exchange market on March 8, 2022, in response to disorderly market conditions on the onset of the war in Ukraine.

During 2022, 15 interventions through auctions were scheduled to be held. After the turmoil in the markets related to the war in Ukraine, 3 pre-announced interventions were cancelled (respectively, March 17, April 13, and April 27, 2022). Starting from May 2022, the interventions through auctions return as previously scheduled. As of August 2022, 7 foreign exchange purchase auctions have been organized and 5 auctions are yet to follow.

The agreement No. 12574 (protocol of Ministry of Finance and Economy), dated June 27, 2022 (No. 2778 protocol of BOA, dated June 30, 2022) "For some changes in the agreement on the instruments offered by the BOA for liquidity management of the Ministry of Finance and Economy, dated January 20, 2015, amended" between BOA and MFE, offers an Albanian LEK/Euro (ALL/EUR) swap facility for the Ministry of Finance and Economy to be able to use LEK exchange cash balances for foreign currency payments [which are covered during 2022 from the EUROBOND issues on November 2021 (637 million EUR in TSA)].

The maximum amount of unpaid LEK/Euro SWAP contracts cannot be more than 200 (two hundred) million Euros, calculated at the BOA's official exchange rate on the day of conclusion of each contract. The maximum duration of the LEK/Euro SWAP contract is 6 months.

Since the beginning of 2023, the Euro/Lek (EURALL) exchange rate has been constantly appreciating, and in July, the EURALL exchange rate reached its historical minimum of 100.5 lek, a decrease by 14.4% compared to the first days of January. After averaging 115.5 in the first quarter, only 0.8% lower than the fourth quarter of 2022, eur/lek began a steady decline.

The strengthening of the Lek has reflected the improvements in the balance of payments, as shown by the reduction of the current account deficit, mainly as a result of the high surplus of services and remittances. At the same time, the inflows in the financial account, mainly in the form of FDIs, have been sufficient to cover the deficit of the current account.

Current account deficit decreased to 3.3% of GDP in the first half of the year, from 6.0% in 2022. Its reduction was determined by high tourism inflows and strong growth in remittances. On the other hand, FDIs have maintained a high growth momentum, covering 170% of the current account deficit in the first half of 2023.

Another factor influencing the appreciation of the exchange rate has been the monetary and fiscal policy stance. The increase in interest rates by the BOA, accompanied by the slowdown in lending activity, has led to a tighter monetary supply of the Lek, an effect that has been more emphasized by the parallel tightening nature of the fiscal policy, reflected in a high budget surplus and the issuance of the Eurobond in the foreign markets.

Considering the rapid appreciation and at the same time the widening of spreads by commercial banks, with the objective of avoiding disturbances in the internal foreign exchange market, the BOA took several measures. BOA has:

		- Realized in two cases direct interventions for the purchase of the foreign currency; - Realized verbal intervention; - Revised the currency purchase calendar by increasing the target purchase amount and adding an auction for the purchase of the foreign currency. Although the purchases of the BOA were not in large amounts (17.10 mio euro in total), they were decisive in stabilizing the exchange rate. Since July, the euro has strengthened, being traded at the end of August around the level of 108.20 lek. The de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as floating.
Free floating
Official exchange rate	Yes.	The BOA sets the official rate of the lek against the US dollar and the euro every day, based on rates quoted by the 10 most active commercial banks. Rates for other currencies are based on US dollar cross-rates observed in international foreign exchange markets. The official rate of the lek vis-à-vis the principal foreign currencies is the rate used to settle customs obligations and reevaluate the foreign exchange positions of the BOA. Participants in the domestic foreign exchange market are not required to use the official rate in their transactions; however, the BOA requires commercial banks to use the official rate to convert foreign currency positions reported in their monthly balance sheet data.

Inflation-targeting framework	Yes.
Target setting body	Yes.	BOA Supervisory Council is the highest decision-making and supervisory body of the BOA. By law, the BOA is independent in formulating and implementing the monetary policy, including setting a numerical target for inflation. The Supervisory Council has decided that the inflation target is 3.0% over the medium term. Only the Supervisory Council can change the target. The decisions are taken by a majority vote. This degree of independence is outweighed through increased transparency and accountability of its actions. The Supervisory Council meets on a regular schedule published in the beginning of every year. It conducts eight regular meetings for monetary policy decision-making. The monetary policy decisions of the BOA are guided by the deviation of the medium-term inflation forecast from the target. The inflation analysis is broadly based on the assessment of current and expected economic, monetary, and financial conditions.

Inflation target	Yes.
Target number	Yes.
Point target	Yes.	In quantitative terms, the BOA defines price stability as keeping the annual change in consumer prices at 3%, on average terms, and for long time periods. To achieve its objective, the BOA employs the following market-based monetary policy instruments: open-market operations, standing facilities, and reserve requirements. The main policy instrument is a repo (reverse repo) transaction with a seven-day maturity. (The credit for liquidity support is not classified as a monetary policy instrument; it is intended to address financial stability.) Since June 2010, the objective of monetary operations has been to steer and keep short-term interest rates in the interbank market near the base rate set by the BOA Governing Council and minimize their volatility.

Crawl-like arrangement	Yes.	The de jure exchange rate arrangement is managed floating. The Bank of Algeria (BA) does not announce the path of the exchange rate. The external value of the dinar is determined in the interbank foreign exchange market, in which the BA is the main seller. This is because of inflows related to commodity exports, including hydrocarbons, which, under current law, must be surrendered to the BA. The BA manages the dinar with reference to a basket of currencies, and the rate of the dinar relative to the currencies in the basket is based on balance of payments data. The BA has not set a target range for fluctuation of the dinar outside or within any particular band, and the observed exchange rate movements do not Monetary aggregate target	Yes.	The monetary policy framework adjusts to reflect the developments of the economic environment caused by oil price fluctuations. Since 2003, base money has been the main intermediate instrument of monetary policy, and liquidity management tools dominated the monetary policy toolkit. In March 2017, the BA introduced open market operations for the first time. Until November 2017, open market lending operations served as the main policy tool. With the introduction of monetary financing in October 2017, excess liquidity reappeared, and the BA reintroduced liquidity absorption facilities in January 2018. At present, the decline in liquidity has led to greater use of bank refinancing instruments, particularly through open market operations. The exchange rate policy targets a real effective exchange rate in line with its fundamental value but has occasionally been used to contain price pressures.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices	Yes.	The IMF staff report for the 2021 Article IV Consultation and Sixth Review under the Extended Arrangement of the Extended Fund Facility and Request for a Waiver of Nonobservance of a Performance Criterion with Angola states that, as of December 7, 2021, Angola maintained two MCPs that are subject to approval under Article VIII, Section 3, that arise from the lack of a mechanism to prevent potential spreads in excess of 2% emerging (1) between successful bids within the National Bank of Angola's (Banco Nacional de Angola – BNA's) foreign exchange auction and (2) for transactions that take place at the reference rate in place and the rate at which transactions take place in the foreign exchange auction on that day remain. Angola maintains restrictions on the making of payments and transfers for current international transactions under the transitional arrangements of Article XIV, Section 2. The measures maintained pursuant to Article XIV are (1) limits on the availability of foreign exchange for invisible transactions, that is travel expenses and (2) limits on unrequited transfers to foreign-based individuals and institutions. Exchange restrictions subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Section 2(a) were removed, specifically (1) the discriminatory application of the 0.1% stamp tax on foreign exchange operations by natural persons, (2) the operation of the priority list for access to US dollars at the official exchange rate, and (3) a special tax of 10% on transfers to nonresidents under contracts of foreign technical assistance or management services. The MCP subject to approval under Article VIII, Section 3, arising from the discriminatory application of the 0.1% stamp tax on foreign exchange operations by natural persons was also removed. Multiple	Yes.	The exchange rate structure is considered multiple owing to the lack of a mechanism to prevent potential spreads in excess of 2% emerging (1) between successful bids within the BNA foreign exchange auction; and (2) for transactions that take place at the prevailing reference rate and the rate at which transactions take place in the foreign exchange auction on that day. The BNA publishes a reference exchange rate daily; and, since April 1, 2020, its portal has displayed the market exchange rates of the euro and the US dollar in relation to the kwanza. These exchange rates are calculated as the arithmetic mean of the bid and ask rates published on Bloomberg.

Other managed arrangement	Yes.	The de jure exchange rate arrangement is floating. However, the BNA closely monitors exchange rate variation with the aim of maintaining price stability in the economy; and it intervenes in the foreign exchange market by conducting currency auctions. The BNA sells foreign currency to the commercial banks. Companies and banks wishing to trade in foreign currency must transact through Bloomberg's "FXGO" trading platform. The BNA may also limit the daily variations of the exchange rate by arbitrarily classifying certain bids. The BNA publishes the results of the auctions and the respective reference exchange rates on its website. In the Extraordinary Session of the MPC, the BNA decided to implement a floating exchange rate regime in which the exchange rate is freely defined by the market, that is, according to the demand and supply of foreign currency. Given that the exchange rate has reduced its flexibility since June 2022 with several adjustments and short periods of stability, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified to other managed from floating, effective June 9, 2022.

Monetary aggregate target	Yes.	The BNA uses base money as its monetary policy anchor. The BNA's operational target is reserve money, and its intermediate target is the money supply (M2). Under the operational framework, the BNA mainly uses the following instruments: open market operations and the reserve ratio, and the marginal lending; and liquidity absorption facilities. Although the regime remains focused on monetary aggregates, the use of the key interest rate (taxa diretora) serves as a complement to the signaling effect. The BNA does not use interest rate targets. The monetary policy interest rate was implemented at the first MPC meeting held October 28, 2011.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices	Yes.	The IMF staff report for the Third Review under the Extended Arrangement under the Extended Fund Facility, Request for Waivers of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, and Financing Assurances Review with Argentina states that as of December 12, 2022, Argentina has taken a number of measures since early October 2022 with respect to its foreign exchange regime that give rise to new MCPs, exchange restrictions, and intensify pre-existing exchange restrictions. These measures also amount to nonobservance of the continuous PCs on the introduction or intensification/modification of exchange restrictions/MCPs. More specifically, the key changes fall within the following categories: (1) Foreign Exchange Incentive Scheme: On November 28, the Argentine government reinstated its Foreign Exchange Incentive Scheme to encourage soy exporters and producers to sell their stocks that was introduced on a temporary basis, and which expired in September. Under the current scheme, exporters of soybean and derivates can fulfill their surrender requirement by exchanging their dollar receipts at a more preferential exchange rate of 230 pesos per dollar. Because of the large spread between the preferential exchange rate and the official exchange rate (which trades at around 168 pesos per dollar), which exceeds 2%, and given that the old measure had expired before the reintroduction, this measure constitutes a new MCP subject to Fund jurisdiction. (2) Exchange Tax: Argentina maintains (a) an exchange restriction and an MCP arising from a 30% tax on the purchase of foreign exchange by individuals and on payments for consumption abroad. Under Decree No. 682/2022, the 30% tax has been extended to purchases of foreign currency for the payment of (i) personal, cultural, and recreational services and (ii) the importation of a list of luxury goods. The extension of the coverage of the 30% tax amounts to an intensification of the existing exchange restriction. It also amounts to a modification of the MCP. (Country Report No. 22/388)
Exchange measures imposed for security reasons	Yes.
In accordance with IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51)	Yes.	Argentina notified the IMF that it maintains restrictions in accordance with UNSC resolutions on preventing the financing of terrorism.
Other security restrictions	Yes.	The Central Bank of the Argentine Republic (BCRA) has established that financial and exchange institutions are subject to the provisions of Law Nos. 25.246 and 26.734 as amended and supplemented, Decree No. 918/12, and FIU Resolution No. 12/11 as amended, 30-E/2017, and FIU Resolution No. 29/2013. Under these laws, decrees, and resolutions, regulated institutions must follow the regulatory guidelines of the FIU for the prevention of money laundering, financing of terrorism, and other unlawful activities "without delay," including Argentine Executive Branch decrees regarding UNSC resolutions on combating terrorism and resolutions (and their annexes) of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Worship. Article 1 of Executive Decree No. 918/12 regulates the measures and procedures for the administrative freezing of goods linked to the criminal activities specified in Article 306 of the Criminal Code (financing of terrorism), as well as the procedure for inclusion and exclusion from the lists established in accordance with UNSC resolutions.

		Communication "A" 6244 and now Paragraph 5.5 of the TO de EyC retained the minimum information that ADs must verify when funds are transferred to and from abroad, including the messages that pertain to these transfers (as well as various control mechanisms) to include: – the payer's and recipient's information, – having procedures to detect information missing in transfers and, in such cases, keeping them pending settlement until omissions are remedied.

In 2022, the exchange rate policy carried out by the BCRA was aimed at maintaining the levels of external competitiveness, gradually readjusting the crawl rate to the pace of inflation. In this way, an effort was made to strengthen the international reserves position, based on real foreign currency inflows from the external sector. On the contrary, the BCRA has carried out prudent management of the current regulatory framework, adapting it to the needs of the economic environment, to preserve monetary and exchange rate stability. As macroeconomic conditions allow, regulations will be relaxed, with the objective of maintaining in the medium and long term a set of macroprudential standards compatible with the stimulation of capital flows directed to the real economy. Other monetary framework	Yes.	In January 2022, the BCRA announced a set of measures that reconfigure its monetary policy instruments. These changes were aimed at achieving better liquidity management for financial institutions, increasing the average term of sterilization instruments, and refocusing the policy rate signal on the Liquidity Bill (LELIQ) rate. On the one hand, effective January 17, 2022, the interest rate on 7-day repo liabilities was gradually reduced to match that of 1-day repo liabilities, in an attempt to eliminate incentives for financial institutions to use this instrument. In addition, the maximum holding limit of 28-day term LELIQs was increased up to an amount equivalent to the stock of term deposits of the private sector of each financial institution, focusing the policy interest rate signal on this instrument. Two new instruments were also created, 180-day term LELIQs (effective January 6, 2022) and, effective February 17, 2022, 190-day term Liquidity Notes (NOTALIQs), which will have a variable rate defined as the monetary policy rate plus a spread. The new instruments are auctioned once a week.
		After the change of government, the monetary policy system and the instruments used for its implementation were reformulated. Effective

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

December 18, 2023, the BCRA decided to discontinue LELIQ auctions in the future and began to use reverse repurchase operations as its main instrument to absorb monetary surpluses.

By centralizing its operations with one instrument, and as its policy rate is the only reference interest rate, it aims to send a clearer monetary policy signal and to strengthen its transmission to the rest of the interest rates in the economy.

In the short term, as a result of the inherited imbalances, and as the economy goes through a period of stagflation, demand for money is expected to take some time to recover. In this context, monetary equilibrium requires simultaneously addressing the two main sources of monetary issuance: financing (direct and indirect) of the fiscal deficit and the BCRA's own quasi-fiscal deficit.

The BCRA will continue to direct all monetary policy tools toward achieving monetary stability and reducing inflation. It will also continue to monitor trends in the general price level, the dynamics of the foreign exchange market, and the monetary aggregates so that its policy interest rate can be calibrated and liquidity conditions managed.

Where liquidity injection operations are concerned, the BCRA will continue to exercise the option of engaging in repurchase operations and offering puts on Treasury instruments that the monetary authority deems appropriate. The Central Bank decided that securities eligible for sale to the BCRA through the put mechanism to be auctioned from December 18, 2023, onward will not be included in calculating the limit on credit division for the sector, as the BCRA is the option buyer for banks.

In 2022, the 2022/2023 quota was approved with the same provisions as the 2022 quota, under which financial institutions in Group A are subject to nominal annual fixed rates of up to 64.5% to finance investment projects and up to 74.50% to finance working capital, discounted deferred payment checks, and other special documents and instruments, and institutions should maintain, from October 1, 2022 until March 31, 2023, a balance of such financing that is at least equivalent to 7.5% of their deposits from the nonfinancial private sector in pesos, excluding deposits from customers resident in the country that engage in agricultural activity and that sell merchandise in the framework of Decree No. 576/22, 787/22, Chapter I of Decree No. 194/23, Decree No. 443/23, and Chapter I of Decree No. 492/23 for those who export directly or as a result of a production process carried out in the country (including the parties indicated in Communication "C" 93169). (Paragraph 3.13.1.2. Consolidated Text Savings deposits, payroll, and special accounts).

In 2023, the 2023 quota was approved with the same provisions as the 2022/2023 quota, under which financial institutions included in Group A must grant financing at nominal annual fixed rates of up to 64.5% to finance investment projects and up to 74.50% to finance working capital and discounting of deferred payment checks and other special documents and instruments, and from April 1, 2022, until September 30, 2023, institutions must maintain a balance of such financing that is at least equivalent to 7.5% of their deposits from the nonfinancial private sector in pesos.

Exchange bureaus and offices may only simultaneously perform activities related to tourism and sales of travel tickets. The retail exchange rates offered in Buenos Aires by institutions in the system may be consulted at the BCRA's website. The information includes "reference retail exchange rates" calculated on the basis of the rates announced by institutions. These rates are intended to provide information regarding quotations in the MLC (Communication "B" 9791). Blocked accounts	No.

Imports and Import Payments

Foreign exchange budget	No.
Financing requirements for imports	Yes.	For purposes of access to the foreign exchange market, commercial debts for the financing of imports of goods should be considered among the debts indicated in Paragraph 10.2.4 of the TO de EyC (Communication "A" 6818 dated October 28, 2019, in place since November 1, 2019).
Minimum financing requirements	Yes.	Paragraphs 10.3.2.5 and 10.3.2.6 established that for goods with tariff positions indicated in Paragraphs 10.10.1 and 10.10.2 (luxury consumer goods or sumptuous goods), access to the foreign exchange market must take place as of 90 and 365 calendar days, respectively, of the date of registration of clearance through customs of the said goods. Effective March 4, 2022, the 90-day time period was extended to 180 days by Communication "A" 7466 of March 3, 2022, for goods shipped on or after March 4, 2022. Paragraphs 10.3.2.5. and 10.3.2.6 of TO were repealed effective December 13, 2023 by Communication "A" 7917. Effective March 4, 2022, Paragraph 5 of Communication "A" 7466 dated March 3, 2022, issued requirements for cases in which the imported goods are not included in the time periods set forth in Paragraphs 10.3.2.5 or 10.3.2.6 and declaration in the SIMI is a requirement for registration of the customs entry of the goods. In this regard, it was established, within the framework of the SIMI, how the BCRA would assign the categories to each one that is officially registered in the SIMI as from March 4, 2022, once the latter has obtained the "EXITED" status based on the intervention of the competent agencies in the matter, and how the said category defined the minimum time periods for access to the foreign exchange market to make payments for the goods included in the SIMI. A Category A, which maintained the same regulatory treatment for the associated transactions, and a Category B, which meant that the associated imports of goods must be financed at least 180 days from the date of registration of the customs entry of the goods into Argentina. The BCRA assigned to each importer for the year 2022 a limit for SIMI Category A, for goods not included in the exceptions provided, which would be equivalent to the lesser of the following two amounts:

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

(1) The free on board (FOB) value of its imports for the year 2021 plus 5% of the said value.
(2) The FOB value of its imports for the year 2020 plus 70% of the said value.

In the calculation of the FOB value of imports for the years 2020 and 2021, imports registered in the importer's name in the Import Payments Tracking System (SEPAIMPO) that granted access to the foreign exchange market were taken into account, except those that corresponded to temporary imports or goods included in the exceptions provided.

The amount of Category A assigned by the BCRA was the equivalent of US$50,000 when the customer has not registered imports in the last two years or when the amount resulting from the indicated calculation was lower.

The limit for SIMI Category A at each point would be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of each category accumulated up to and including the current month. The equivalent of 20% of the corresponding annual limit would be added to the said amount, not to exceed the said limit. In the event that the amount indicated for a category should be less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the corresponding annual limit, whichever is lower, would be adopted.

Among the exceptions provided for, the following were contemplated: payments for imports with SIMI Category B declaration and the goods paid for were capital goods or consisted of kits for the detection of the COVID-19 coronavirus or other goods whose tariff positions were included in the list published by Decree No. 333/2020 and its supplementary provisions or concerned goods subject to non-automatic import licenses.

Later, considering the particularities of certain goods to be imported, exceptions to the 180-day period were included (Communications "A" 7469, effective March 11, 2022: petroleum or bituminous mineral oils, their preparations and their waste or petroleum gases and other gaseous hydrocarbons, exceptions to the 180-day period were included and "A" 7471 effective March 18, 2022: non-agglomerated bituminous coal).

Communication "A" 7472, effective March 22, 2022, reduced the time period for a group of goods (import of fertilizers and/or phytosanitary products and/or inputs that are necessary for the local elaboration of the same) to 90 calendar days.

Subsequently, pursuant to Communication "A" 7488, effective April 7, 2022, SIMI Category C was introduced, whereby, for certain tariff positions of raw materials and standardized inputs and under certain conditions, a treatment similar to Category A was established.

The annual limit of SIMI Category C that was assigned by the BCRA was the difference between the limit assigned by the BCRA to Category A and the higher of the two amounts considered for the purposes of establishing the said limit. It was also established that the limit for SIMI Category C at each point in time would be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit accumulated up to and including the current month. The equivalent of 20% of the annual limit would be added to the said amount, not to exceed said limit. In the event that the amount indicated were less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the annual limit, whichever is lower, would be adopted.

Later, as indicated in Communication “A” 7490 of April 12, 2022, the TO de EyC was updated and these rules were included in Paragraph 10.14.

Communications “A” 7507 effective May 5, 2022, “A” 7516 of May 19, 2022, and “A” 7528 of June 16, 2022, included transactions related with pharmaceutical products, its production inputs and other items related with health exempted (under the conditions specifically provided for in each case) from compliance with the minimum financing period.

Then, by means of Paragraph 1 of Communication “A” 7532 incorporated into Paragraph 10.12 of the TO, effective June 27, 2022, certain modifications were announced, among them:

(1) It was established that the limit of SIMI Category A or C at each point in time would be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of each category accumulated up to and including the current month. In the event that the amount indicated for a category was less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the corresponding annual limit, whichever is lower, would be adopted. Meaning that up to September 30, 2022, the equivalent of 20% of the annual limit would not be added to the said amount. Effective October 1, 2022, the 20% was added again.

(2) The exception foreseen for goods subject to non-automatic import licenses was suspended, establishing that while such suspension lasts, imports of such goods for the years 2020 and 2021 would be taken into consideration for the computation of the limits for Categories A and C.

(3) Effective July 1, 2022, it was established that the annual limit of Category A for an importer would be, at a minimum, equivalent to 115% of the computable FOB value of its imports for the year 2021, when the amount imported in the said year was less than or equal to the equivalent of US$1,000,000.

From the implementation of the Argentine Republic Import System (SIRA) to replace the Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI) and the provisions of Communication “A” 7622 of October 17, 2022, and supplementary provisions reflected in Paragraph 10.10. of the TO, a scheme is presented in which, for operations supported with SIRA with “EXITED” status, entities may, provided compliance with the other applicable regulatory requirements is verified, provide customers with access to the exchange market to carry out:
10.10.1.1. Payments with customs entry registration that are carried out after the period in calendar days stated in the SIRA declaration, from the date of said recording, has ended; or 10.10.1.2. Payments with customs entry registration or payments with pending customs entry registration that are carried out through a swap and/or arbitrage against a local account in foreign exchange of the customer, provided the importer has reported the use of this option in the SIRA declaration; or 10.10.1.3. Payments with customs entry registration or payments with pending customs entry registration for operations subject to any of the conditions provided in Paragraphs 10.10.2. and 10.10.3.; or

10.10.1.4. Payments with pending customs entry registration or payments with customs entry registration before the deadline provided in the SIRA declaration, when the customer is situated within the available amount of up to the equivalent of US$50,000 during the calendar year, in all entities combined.

If the SIRA declaration indicates that the payment will be made in the currency of a country with which the BCRA has a current Bilateral Currency Swap Agreement, the entity will be required to verify that the payment is made in that currency.

In operations supported by SIMI carried out while it is in force, or in operations for which the presentation of a SIRA declaration is not a requirement for the customs entry registration of the goods, access to the foreign exchange market was governed by the provisions in force until October16, 2022.

Effective January 1, 2023, Communication "A" 7638 replaced Paragraph 2.1 of Communication "A" 7532, providing that institutions were required to have an affidavit from the customer in which they confirm that the figure obtained by adding the amount of the payment whose execution is being requested to the total payments executed as of January 1, 2022, not corresponding to operations listed in Paragraph 2.2 of that Communication, did not exceed the equivalent of the amount obtained by multiplying one-twelfth of the annual limit of SIMI Category A provided in Paragraph 10.14.1 of the External Affairs and Foreign Exchange Regulations by the number of months between January 2022 and the current month, inclusively. The regulations disseminated under Paragraph 2 of Communication "A" 7532 and concordant provisions were incorporated into Paragraph 10.12. of the TO.

Effective December 13, 2023, paragraphs 10.10., 10.12., and 10.14. of the TO were repealed by Communication "A" 7917 and it introduced new rules on access to foreign exchange for the processing of import payments as follows:

Paragraph 1.1. provided it would not be necessary to have a declaration prepared through the SIRA with "EXITED" status as a requirement for access to the foreign exchange market, or to validate the operation in the computerized Single Foreign Trade Current Account System.

Paragraph 1.2. established different minimum periods for access to the foreign exchange market to process import payments with customs entry registration from December 13, 2023, according to the following system:

Energy and fuel: 0 days.
Medicines, fertilizers, phytosanitary products, and/or their inputs: 30 days.
Finished automobiles and luxury goods: 180 days.
All other goods: 25% a month as of day 30.

According to Paragraph 1.3., access before these periods have ended requires prior approval from the BCRA, except when the payment is subject to any of the conditions provided in Paragraph 3, which primarily involves payments made on a financed basis, with funds from goods import financing granted by a local financial institution from a foreign credit facility (Paragraph 3.1) or simultaneous access with settlement of funds in the form of external advances or prefinancing of exports, or export prefinancing granted by local financial institutions funded with foreign credit facilities, subject to conditions (Paragraph 3.2) or with settlement of a new external financial debt (Paragraph 3.3), inter alia.

According to Paragraph 1.4., access to the foreign exchange market for import payments pending customs entry registration required the prior approval of the BCRA, unless the payment was subject to one of the conditions provided in Paragraph 3.

According to Paragraph 1.5., access to the foreign exchange market to execute import payments for goods for which the customs entry registration was made by December 12, 2023, in addition to the remaining applicable requirements, is subject to the prior approval of the BCRA, except when:
- The payment corresponds to transactions financed or guaranteed by local or foreign financial institutions or by international organizations and/or official credit agencies; or
- For the equivalent of the amount payable, the customer has a Certificate for regimes to access foreign exchange for incremental production of oil and/or natural gas (Decree No. 277/22) issued as provided in Paragraph 3.21.; or
- The customer has the equivalent of the amount payable with a Certificate of direct investment contributions in the framework of the Regime to Promote the Knowledge Economy (Decree No. 679/22), issued in the framework of Paragraph 3.2.2., and the payment is arranged with a swap and/or arbitrage operation with funds deposited to a special account held by the customer for the Regime to Promote the Knowledge Economy, Decree No. 679/22.

All operations must also be validated, at the time of access to the foreign exchange market, in the online system implemented for that purpose by the BCRA (Paragraph 1.6.).

Communication “A” 7925 effective December 22, 2023, regulated the conditions for importers of goods to subscribe BOPREAL up to the amount of the outstanding debt for their imports of goods with registration of customs entry until December 12, 2023.
The entity that finalizes the subscription offer on behalf of the customer must have the relevant certifications for the outstanding payment amount issued by the entity responsible for monitoring the relevant SEPAIMPO formalizations, and must verify that:
1.1. The obligation qualifies as a goods import debt pursuant to Paragraph 10.2.4. of the TO;
1.2. The operation must be declared, if applicable, in the most recent required submission of the External Assets and Liabilities Statement;
1.3. Certain conditions provided in Paragraph 10.3.2.1 of the TO must be met;
1.4. The customer must meet the additional requirements provided in Paragraphs 3.16.2. to 3.16.6. of the TO;
1.5. An affidavit is available from the customer stating the debt for which the subscription is requested is pending payment.

In accordance with Paragraph 3 of such regulations, importers of goods subscribing BOPREALs corresponding to the longest term offered by the BCRA, prior to December 31, 2023, and for an amount greater than or equal to 50% of the total outstanding amount of their eligible debts, will be able to access the foreign exchange market as of February 1, 2024, to pay such commercial debts for imports of goods and services prior to December 13, 202,3 in a total amount equivalent to 5% of the subscribed amount under this mechanism. Communication "A" 7935 of December 28, 2023, subsequently extended the BOPREAL subscription deadline until January 31, 2024. Paragraph 4 provides that institutions may give customers access to the foreign exchange market for the payment of eligible debts, provided the applicable requirements are met, through a swap and/or arbitrage operation with funds deposited to a local account and deriving from principal and interest in foreign exchange from BOPREAL. Paragraph 5 provides that, in preparing the affidavits provided in Paragraph 3.16.3. of the TO, sales with settlement in foreign exchange in the country or abroad in connection with BOPREALs or transfers of these bonds to depositaries abroad should not be reflected when executed in amounts up to the amount acquired in the primary subscription by those who participated in that process. Paragraph 4 of Communication "A" 7935 (pursuant to "C" 96983) effective December 28, 2023, provides that importers of goods that have purchased BOPREALs in a primary subscription, for the purpose of preparing the affidavits provided in Paragraph 3.16.3. of the TO, must not include sales of securities with settlement in foreign exchange abroad or transfers of securities to depositaries abroad, both completed from April 1, 2024, when the market value of these operations does not exceed the difference between the amount obtained from the sale with settlement abroad in foreign exchange of BOPREALs acquired in the primary subscription and their nominal value, if the former amount is lower.

Advance payment requirements	Yes.	Advance payments for imports of goods are allowed on condition that the importer submits an affidavit committing to demonstrate entry of the goods into the country within 270 days for advance payments on capital goods and 90 days for other goods. In the event that the foreign supplier is a counterparty connected with the importer or longer time periods are needed for formalization of the clearance of the imports, the prior approval of the BCRA is required for access to the foreign exchange market (Paragraph 10.4.2.4). These periods may be extended by the institutions for reasons of force majeure (Paragraph 10.5.5). Importers that have made sight and/or advance payments and have not demonstrated the entry of the goods within the required period, nor have they requested an extension or repatriation of the foreign exchange via the foreign exchange market, may not make further advance payments until the pending operations have been regularized. The public sector and trusts established with national public sector contributions, as well as legal entities responsible for the supply of critical medicines that are brought in by Specific Request are exempt from this provision (Paragraph 10.4.2.6). Paragraph 10.4.2.9. provided institutions were required to confirm that the payment to be made was in one of the following circumstances: (1) The import was associated with a declaration in the SIRA with "EXITED" status and the payment corresponded to one of the conditions of Paragraph 10.10.1.;

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

(2) The import was associated with a declaration in the Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI) and compliance with the provisions of Paragraphs 10.11. and 10.12. and any of the conditions provided in Paragraph 10.14.2. has been verified; or
(3) The import did not require a SIMI or SIRA declaration with "EXITED" status for the customs entry registration of the goods, compliance with the provisions of Paragraphs 10.11. and 10.12. was verified, and the payment was subject to one of the conditions provided in Paragraph 10.10.3.

According to Paragraph 10.4.2.10., at the time of access to the foreign exchange market, the entity was required to have the following in all cases:
The status of the operation must be verified in the online system implemented by the BCRA for that purpose.
A validation of the operation must be created in the computerized Single Foreign Trade Current Account system implemented by the AFIP on the same day as access or on the previous business day, except for transactions subject to Paragraph 10.10.3.

On implementation of the SIRA to replace the Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI), in accordance with Paragraph 10.10. of the TO incorporating Communication "A" 7622 of October 17, 2022, and supplementary provisions, a system was presented in which, for operations supported by SIRA with "EXITED" status, entities could, subject to verification of compliance with the remaining applicable regulatory requirements, provide access to the foreign exchange market to enable the customer to execute:
10.10.1.1. Payments with customs entry registration finalized after the period in calendar days stated in the SIRA declaration, from the date of the said registration, has ended; or 10.10.1.2. Payments with customs entry registration or payments with pending customs entry registration that were carried out by performing a swap and/or arbitrage against a local account in foreign exchange held by the customer, provided the importer has reported the use of this option in the SIRA Declaration; or 10.10.1.3. Payments with customs entry registration or payments with pending customs entry registration for operations that were subject to any of the conditions provided in Paragraphs 10.10.2. and 10.10.3.; or
10.10.1.4. Payments with pending customs entry registration or payments with customs entry registration before the end of the period provided in the SIRA declaration, when the customer is situated within the available amount of up to the equivalent of US$50,000 during the calendar year, in all entities combined.

Under Paragraph 10.10.2., transactions authorized for access before the deadline provided in the SIRA declaration with validation in the Single Foreign Trade Current Account system under which entities could provide access to the foreign exchange market to make payments with pending customs registration in the circumstances provided in Paragraphs 10.10.2.1. to 10.10.2.6. (public health goods, energy and fuel, inputs required for national government infrastructure works, and capital goods), provided the operation involved is supported by a SIRA declaration with "EXITED" status to which a period of 0 (zero) calendar days was assigned, the conditions provided in each case were verified, and the remaining applicable regulatory requirements have been met, including validation in the AFIP computerized Foreign Trade Single Current Account system on the same day as access, or on the previous business day.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

Paragraph 10.10.3. provided the transactions authorized for access without validation in the Single Foreign Trade Current Account System, in which institutions were allowed to provide access to the foreign exchange market to make payments before the minimum period required for the operation, provided the conditions in Paragraphs 10.10.3.1 to 10.10.3.13. and the remaining applicable regulatory requirements have been met.

From January 6, 2021, if the intended advance payment corresponded to goods whose tariff positions were included in Paragraphs 12.1 (luxury consumer goods) and 12.2 (sumptuous goods) and the conditions for exclusion provided for the position were not met, access to the foreign exchange market was subject to the prior approval of the BCRA (Paragraph 10.4.2.9, which incorporated Communication "A" 7201).

Paragraph 10.11.7 incorporated payment with pending customs entry registration for the purchase of capital goods, provided any of the following conditions were met: (1) the customer was an enterprise in the energy sector and/or a company engaged in the construction of infrastructure works for that sector, and the institution had an affidavit from the customer stating that the amount pending settlement for payments made under this paragraph as of December 1, 2021, including the payment whose execution is being requested, did not exceed the equivalent of US$1,000,000; and if that amount were exceeded, the following should be verified: (a) that the sum of the advance payments processed under this paragraph did not exceed 30% of the total amount of goods to be imported; and that (b) the sum of advance, demand, and commercial debt payments without registration of customs entry made under this paragraph did not exceed 80% of the total amount of the goods to be imported.

(2) Effective June 27, 2022, payments on demand or on commercial debt intended for the acquisition of capital goods without customs entry registration, and there is verification that the sum of the advance payments, on demand and on commercial debt without customs entry registration, made under this paragraph, did not exceed 80% of the total amount of the goods to be imported. Previously, the institution must had an affidavit from the customer stating that the amount pending settlement for payments as of December 1, 2021, including the payment whose execution is being requested, does not exceed the equivalent of US$1,000,000. In the event that this amount was exceeded, the institution had to verify that the payment complied with the established conditions (30% and 80%).

Effective December 13, 2023, paragraphs 10.4.2.9., 10.4.2.10., 10.10., 10.11., 10.12., 10.14., 12.1., and 12.2. of the TO were repealed by Communication "A" 7917 .and it established a number of conditions for foreign exchange market access for the processing of payments for new imports of goods and services as follows:

Paragraph 1.1. provides that it will not be necessary to have a declaration prepared through the SIRA with "EXITED" status as a requirement for access to the foreign exchange market, or to validate the operation in the Single Foreign Trade Current Account System.

According to Paragraph 1.4., access to the foreign exchange market to make payments with pending registration of customs entry

Payments for imports by LCs or guaranteed drafts issued or granted by local financial institutions are also authorized under Paragraph 10.3.6 of the TO de EyC, and the institution may access the foreign exchange market as long as they demonstrate customs registration of the goods, regardless of whether the remaining requirements established in the regulation are met. LCs are not required for the release of foreign exchange for imports. Effective March 4, 2022 (date of Paragraph 5 of Communication “A” 7466), institutions have been required to have documentation proving that, at the time of opening or issuance by the institution, any of the conditions set forth in Paragraph 10.14.2 were met (minimum period). Paragraph 10.11.1 allowed access as long as, among other conditions, the institution has an affidavit from the customer indicating that the total amount of the payments associated with their imports of goods transacted via the foreign exchange market as of January 1, 2020, including the payment requested, did not exceed, by more than the equivalent of US$1 million, the amount resulting from considering imports in their name in the SEPAIMPO as of the date indicated, payments under the provisions of Paragraphs 10.11.2 to 10.11.8 not associated with imports already showing in SEPAIMPO, and the amount of the payments made via the foreign exchange market as from July 6, 2020, that corresponded to imports of goods brought in by individual request or courier or operations that are not included in Paragraphs 10.9.1 through 10.9.3, which were loaded as from July 1, 2020, or were loaded prior to this but have not arrived in Argentina prior to this date and the payments associated with goods donated to the National Ministry of Health to improve the nation's medical or health capacity, as provided in Paragraph 10.6.5. As well, the amount of access was reduced by the amount pending settlement of the sum of the payments with outstanding customs registration carried out between September 2, 2019, and December 31, 2019. Communication "A" 7375 reduced the exemption from US$1 million to US$250,000.

Paragraph 10.11.2 provided for deferred payments or payments on demand for imports of goods shipped on or after July 1, 2020, or goods that were previously shipped, but had not arrived in the country prior to that date. Effective March 4, 2022, payments on demand for imports were required to comply with one of the conditions set forth in Paragraph 10.14.2 (see Paragraph 12 of Communication "A" 7466).

Paragraph 10.11.3 provided for settlements of commercial debts for imports of goods with an export credit agency or foreign financial institution or that have a guarantee granted by such institutions, as long as the portion of such imports being paid has not been previously counted for purposes of payments under the threshold set in Paragraph 10.11.1.
Pursuant to Paragraph 9 of Communication "A" 7416 import debts covered by guarantees issued by private insurers on behalf and by order of national governments of other countries were included in Paragraph 10.11.3.

Paragraphs 10.11.4 through 10.11.6 contemplated payments by the public sector, business organizations in which the federal government has a majority shareholding or a majority voice in corporate decisions, or trusts established with contributions from the national public sector, payments of imports of goods by a legal entity responsible for the provision of critical medicines to be brought in under a Specific Request by the beneficiary of the said medical coverage, and payments of imports with registration of customs clearance pending intended for the purchase of COVID-19 detection kits or other goods whose tariff positions were included in the list in Decree No. 333/2020 and its supplementary provisions.

This mechanism was extended under the same conditions for the year 2022 by Paragraph 6 of Communication "A" 7416 dated December 9, 2021 and for the year 2023 by Communication "A" 7553 of July 21, 2022. (2) a Certificate for regimes to access foreign exchange for incremental production of oil and/or natural gas (Decree No. 277/22 effective May 28, 2022) issued as provided in Paragraph 3.21.; or (3) a Certificate of direct investment contributions in the framework of the Regime to Promote the Knowledge Economy (Decree No. 679/22) issued in the framework of Paragraph 3.22., and the operation is carried out with a swap and/or arbitrage with funds deposited to a special account held by the customer for the Regime to Promote the Knowledge Economy, Decree No. 679/22 effective October 11, 2022.

Paragraph 10.11.9 (according to Communication "A" 7348 dated

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

August 26, 2021, and Paragraph 7 of Communication "A" 7416 dated December 9, 2021) allowed access to the foreign exchange market for those customers who comply with the mechanism set forth in Paragraph 3.19 (Certificate of Entry of Financial Debt from Abroad). It should be noted that Paragraph 3.19 mentioned above stated that customers who register settlements on new financial debt abroad and who had a certificate issued by an institution regarding compliance with the requirements set forth in Paragraph 3.19.2 could access the foreign exchange market to, among other things, make payments for the import of goods without the prior approval required in Paragraph 10.11.

Paragraph 10.11.10 allowed the surplus of US$250,000 established for the threshold in Paragraph 10.11.1 to be increased up to US$3 million as long as advance payments for the import of products related to the provision of medicines or other goods related to the medical treatment and/or health care of the population or inputs necessary for the local production of the same are involved.

Under Paragraph 10.11.11 (included pursuant to Paragraph 1.1. of Communication "A" 7385), payments on demand or commercial debts without customs entry registration were allowed subject to the following conditions: Paragraph 10.11.11.1: the operation involved the importation of inputs to be used for the production of goods in Argentina; and Paragraph 10.11.11.2: the payments made under this paragraph did not exceed, in the current calendar month and for the institutions as a whole, the amount obtained by considering the average of the total amount of imports of goods eligible for the purposes of Paragraph 10.11.1 in the last 12 calendar months, net of the amount pending settlement for payments with customs entry registration pending when there is a delay recorded by the importer. Then, pursuant to Paragraph 1 of Communication "A" 7433 effective January 6, 2022, Paragraph 10.11.11.2 was modified, replacing the average amount of total imports eligible for the purposes of Paragraph 10.11.1 with the average amount of imports of inputs eligible for the purposes of Paragraph 10.11.1.

As of the dates of the rules set forth in Paragraph 5 of Communication "A" 7466 effective March 4, 2022, the following requirement was introduced: In those cases in which a declaration made through the SIMI was a requirement for the registration of the customs entry of goods, any of the conditions set forth in Paragraph 10.14.2, which were compatible with the operations referred to in this paragraph (10.11.11), should be met.

Paragraph 10.11.12 (introduced by Paragraph 3 of Communication "A" 7507 effective May 5, 2022) provided for payments with pending customs entry registration made with funds originating from financing for imports of goods granted by a local financial institution from a commercial credit line from abroad, provided the maturity date of the financing granted is equal to or later than the estimated date of arrival of the goods in Argentina plus 15 calendar days. The institution must have an affidavit from the importer in which he undertakes, except in situations of force majeure beyond his control, to register the goods for customs entry within 15 days of their arrival in Argentina.

From October 2, 2020, the amount of funds that importers could access on the foreign exchange market under the conditions established in Paragraph 10.11 was increased by the equivalent of 50% of the amounts that the importer repatriates and sells on the foreign exchange market from advance payments from exports or prefinancing of exports from abroad with a minimum term of 180 days (Paragraph 10.11.13).

From January 4, 2021 (Communication "A" 7193), access to the foreign exchange market was also allowed for the remaining 50% of the increase to the extent that the additional portion corresponded to payments for imports of capital goods. On March 19, 2021 (Communication "A" 7239), goods deemed to be necessary inputs for the production of exportable goods were added to the remaining 50% of the increase, with the institution being required to have an affidavit from the customer on the type of goods involved and its status as an input in the production of goods for export (Paragraph 10.11.13.).

In addition, Paragraph 10.11.14. provided this involved the repayment of the principal in external financial debt deriving from refinancing of commercial debt for imports of goods registered with the BCRA in the framework of Paragraph 3.20.

Before making payments for imports of goods under the terms of Paragraphs 10.11.1, 10.11.10, and 10.11.11, the institution was required, in addition to requesting an affidavit from the customer, to establish that the said affidavit was consistent with the data in the online system implemented for that purpose in the BCRA.

Effective June 28, 2022, until September 30, 2022 (Communication "A" 7532), the client must submit an affidavit statement in which they record that by adding the amount of the payment whose course is being requested to the total payments made as of January 1, 2022, that do not correspond to some operations (Paragraph 2.2 of Communication "A" 7532, for example, temporary imports, imports paid with funds originated in the financing of imports of goods granted by a local financial entity from a foreign commercial line of credit), the equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of SIMI Category A that has accrued up to and including the current month is not exceeded. Effective October 1, 2022, the client's affidavit, in which they record that by adding the amount of the payment whose course was being requested to the total payments made as of January 1, 2022, that do not correspond to some operations (Paragraph 2.2 of Communication "A" 7532, for example, temporary imports, imports paid with funds originated in the financing of imports of goods granted by a local financial entity from a foreign commercial line of credit), the equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of SIMI Category A that has accrued up to and including the current month was not exceeded, was eliminated.

Paragraph 10.12. which incorporated Communication "A" 7532 and concordant provisions, provided, in the case of imports in connection with an operation that would not require a SIRA or SIMI declaration for the registration of customs entry of goods or supported with a SIMI declaration, in addition to the remaining requirements, for access to the foreign exchange market to be given for payments of imports of goods or for the repayment of the principal of financial debts deriving from imports of goods (Code P13), the entity would require the prior approval of the BCRA, except when:

(1) the entity has an affidavit from the customer stating that, if the amount of the payment requested and the total amount of payments for imports of goods carried out from January 1, 2022, not subject to Paragraphs 10.12.2.1. to 10.12.2.9 were added, the equivalent of the value resulting from multiplying one-twelfth of the annual limit under SIMI Category A as provided in Paragraph 10.14.1. by the number of months between January 2022 and the current month inclusively would not be exceeded.
If the customer met the conditions to process a SIMI Category C payment in the framework of Paragraph 10.14.2.3., the entity could also consider this requirement to be met with an affidavit from the customer stating that, if the amount of the payment requested were added, the total amount of payments made previously under that paragraph and the total amount of payments for imports of goods made since January 1, 2022, not covered by Paragraphs 10.12.2.1. to 10.12.2.8., the equivalent of the figure obtained by multiplying one-twelfth of the sum of the annual SIMI Category A and C limits, as provided in Paragraph 10.14.1., by the number of months between January 2022 and the current month, inclusively, was not exceeded.

(2) The payment was in one of the situations provided in Paragraphs 10.12.2.1.to 10.12.2.10.

Paragraph 3.19 (according to Communication “A” 7348) allowed access to the foreign exchange market for the cancellation of commercial debts with debt from abroad for the import of goods and services without prior approval by the BCRA. Communication “A” 7416 (Paragraph 7) effective January 3, 2022, allowed access to the foreign exchange market for the cancellation of debts (not just commercial) with debt from abroad for the import of goods and services without prior approval by the BCRA.

Effective December 13, 2023, paragraphs 3.19., 3.20., 10.10., 10.11., 10.12., and 10.14. of the TO were repealed by Communication “A” 7917 and it introduced new rules on access to the foreign exchange market for the processing of import payments as follows:

Paragraph 1.1. provided it would not be necessary to have a declaration prepared through the SIRA with “EXITED” status as a requirement for access to the foreign exchange market, or to validate the operation in the computerized Single Foreign Trade Current Account System.

Paragraph 1.2. established different minimum periods for access to the foreign exchange market to process import payments with customs entry registration from December 13, 2023, according to the following system:

Energy and fuel: 0 days.
Medicines, fertilizers, phytosanitary products, and/or their inputs: 30 days.
Finished automobiles and luxury goods: 180 days.
All other goods: 25% a month as of day 30.

According to Paragraph 1.3., access before these periods requires prior approval from the BCRA, except when the payment is subject to any of the conditions provided in Paragraph 3, which primarily involves payments made on a financed basis, with funds from goods import financing granted by a local financial institution from a foreign credit facility (Paragraph 3.1) or simultaneous access with settlement of funds in the form of external advances or prefinancing of exports, or export prefinancing granted by local financial institutions funded with foreign credit facilities, subject to conditions (Paragraph 3.2) or with settlement of a new external financial debt (Paragraph 3.3), inter alia.

According to Paragraph 1.4., access to the foreign exchange market for import payments pending customs entry registration required the prior approval of the BCRA, unless the payment was subject to one of the conditions provided in Paragraph 3.

According to Paragraph 1.5., access to the foreign exchange market to execute import payments for goods for which the customs entry registration was made by December 12, 2023, in addition to the remaining applicable requirements, is subject to the prior approval of the BCRA, except when:
- The payment corresponds to transactions financed or guaranteed by local or foreign financial institutions or by international organizations and/or official credit agencies; or
- For the equivalent of the amount payable, the customer has a Certificate for regimes to access foreign exchange for incremental production of oil and/or natural gas (Decree No. 277/22) issued as provided in Paragraph 3.21.; or
- The customer has the equivalent of the amount payable with a Certificate of direct investment contributions in the framework of the Regime to Promote the Knowledge Economy (Decree No. 679/22), issued in the framework of Paragraph 3.2.2., and the payment is arranged with a swap and/or arbitrage operation with funds deposited to a special account held by the customer for the Regime to Promote the Knowledge Economy, Decree No. 679/22.

All operations must also be validated, at the time of access to the foreign exchange market, in the online system implemented for that purpose by the BCRA (Paragraph 1.6.).

Communication “A” 7925 effective December 22, 2023, regulated the conditions for importers of goods to subscribe BOPREAL up to the amount of the outstanding debt for their imports of goods with registration of customs entry until December 12, 2023.
The entity that finalizes the subscription offer on behalf of the customer must have the relevant certifications for the outstanding payment amount issued by the agency responsible for monitoring the relevant SEPAIMPO formalizations, and must verify that:
1.1. The obligation qualifies as a goods import debt pursuant to Paragraph 10.2.4. of the TO;
1.2. The operation must be declared, if applicable, in the most recent required submission of the External Assets and Liabilities Statement;
1.3. Certain conditions provided in Paragraph 10.3.2.1 of the TO must be met;
1.4. The customer must meet the additional requirements provided in Paragraphs 3.16.2. to 3.16.6. of the TO;
1.5. An affidavit is available from the customer stating that the debt for which the subscription is requested is pending payment.

In accordance with Paragraph 3 of such regulations, importers of goods subscribing BOPREALs corresponding to the longest term offered by the BCRA, prior to December 31 2023, and for an amount greater than or equal to 50% of the total outstanding amount of their eligible debts, will be able to access the foreign exchange market as of February 1, 2024, to pay such commercial debts for imports of goods and services prior to December 13, 2023, in a total amount equivalent to 5% of the subscribed amount under this mechanism. Communication “A” 7935 of December 28, 2023, subsequently extended the BOPREAL subscription deadline until January 31, 2024.

Paragraph 4 provides that institutions may give customers access to the foreign exchange market for the payment of eligible debts, provided the applicable requirements are met, through a swap and/or arbitrage operation with funds deposited to a local account and deriving from principal and interest in foreign exchange from BOPREAL.

Paragraph 5 provides that, in preparing the affidavits provided in Paragraph 3.16.3. of the TO, sales with settlement in foreign exchange in the country or abroad in connection with BOPREALs or transfers of these bonds to depositaries abroad should not be reflected when executed in amounts up to the amount acquired in the primary subscription by those that participated in that process.

Paragraph 4 of Communication “A” 7935 (pursuant to “C” 96983) effective December 28, 2023, provides that importers of goods that have purchased BOPREALs in a primary subscription, for the purpose of preparing the affidavits provided in Paragraph 3.16.3. of the TO, must not include sales of securities with settlement in foreign exchange abroad or transfers of securities to depositaries abroad, both completed as of April 1, 2024, when the market value of these operations does not exceed the difference between the amount obtained from the sale with settlement abroad in foreign exchange of BOPREALs acquired in the primary subscription and their nominal value, if the former amount is lower.

In addition, Paragraph 3.16 of the TO de EyC establishes additional requirements applicable to transactions involving flows of funds abroad via the foreign exchange market that customers must, if relevant, meet for purposes of access to the foreign exchange market without the prior approval of the BCRA:
(1) submission of an affidavit linked to their holdings of external assets in Argentina and abroad (Paragraph 3.16.2, incorporating paragraph 1 of Communication “A” 7030 of May 28, 2020, as amended and/or supplemented by Communications “A” 7042 of June 11, 2020, “A” 7094 of August 27, 2020, and “A” 7327 of July 10, 2021, "A” 7552 effective July 21, 2022, included Argentine Depositary Receipts in the said affidavit, “A” 7833 effective September 5, 2023, included an exception stating that funds related to Decree No. 443/23 are of free usage until October 20, 2023, effective October 21, 2023, the exception that funds related to Decree No. 443/23 are of free usage expired, effective September 20, 2023, Communication “A” 7845 introduced an exception to requirement 3.16.2. – funds deposited in foreign bank accounts that originate from issues of debt securities that fall under Communication “A” 7770 should not be considered, and effective September 28, 2023, Communication “A” 7852 established that for the purposes of preparing the affidavit provided for in points 3.16.3.1. and 3.16.3.2., sales of securities with settlement in foreign currency in the country or abroad should not be taken into account when all of the funds obtained from such settlements have been used or will be used within 10 calendar days in some operations, for

Import licenses and other nontariff measures	Yes.	By Resolution of the AFIP No. 3823/2015, the SIMI is intended to facilitate information-sharing and monitoring of the import process from its start through to customs clearance. Resolution No. 523/2017 of the Ministry of Commerce established a system of automatic and non-automatic import licenses. After December 31, 2017, Resolution AFIP No. 3823/2015 was superseded by Joint AFIP and Commerce Department Resolution No. 4185/2018, which redesigned the SIMI system in terms of specific operational factors for importers.

The SIMI was subsequently replaced by the SIRA, approved by Joint Resolution No. 5.271/2002 of AFIP and the Commerce Department. The purpose of the SIRA is to obtain in advance the information required to ensure that import operations can be predicted and traced, and to identify in advance operations that are unrelated to the economic and financial capacity of the importer. This approach makes it possible to improve and enhance the transparency of the administrative procedure required to monitor imports and to ensure compliance with the security regulations for imported products, while facilitating the exchange of information with the external agencies involved in the customs clearance of merchandise, and that are members of the Argentine Single Foreign Trade Window (VUCEA).

Communication "A" 7466 and supplementary provisions (Paragraph 10.14, amended by Communication "A" 7532 and supplementary provisions) provided within the framework of the SIMI, the BCRA was required to assign a category (A, B, or C) to each officially registered SIMI, effective March 4, 2022, once the latter has obtained the "EXITED" status as of the intervention of the relevant competent agencies. The category assigned by the BCRA, considering the limits set for Categories A and C based on the values imported in 2020 and 2021, defined the minimum terms for access to the foreign exchange market to make payments for goods included in the SIMI.
In particular, it was established that the limit of SIMI Category A or C at each point in time would be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of each category accumulated up to and including the current month. In the event that the amount indicated for a category is less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the corresponding annual limit, whichever is lower, was adopted.
In addition, the goods included in a SIMI Category A or in a SIMI Category C, provided the additional conditions were met, or that fell under the exceptions specified in Paragraph 10.14.2, could access the foreign exchange market to make advance, on demand, or deferred payments provided they met the requirements established in each case.
The remaining goods included in a SIMI Category B or C, unless they had prior approval from the BCRA, could only access the foreign exchange market, provided the other applicable requirements were met, once the minimum term had elapsed from the date of customs entry registration, which was established in general at 180 calendar days and in particular at 60 calendar days for fertilizers, phytosanitary products, or inputs for processing in Argentina and 90 days for the tariff positions listed in Paragraph 10.14.8 (Paragraph 10.14.2.5).
On implementation of the SIRA to replace the Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI), in accordance with Paragraph 10.10. of the TO (incorporating Communication "A" 7622 of October 17, 2022, and supplementary provisions), a system was presented in which, for operations supported by SIRA with "EXITED" status, agencies could, subject to verification of compliance with the remaining applicable regulatory requirements, provide access to the foreign exchange market so that the customer can execute:
10.10.1.1. Payments with customs entry registration finalized after the period in calendar days stated in the SIRA declaration, from the date of the said registration, has ended; or 10.10.1.2. Payments with customs entry registration or payments with pending customs entry registration that are carried out by performing a swap and/or arbitrage against a local account in foreign exchange held by the customer, provided the importer has reported the use of this option in the SIRA Declaration; or 10.10.1.3. Payments with customs entry registration or payments with pending customs entry registration for operations subject to any of the conditions provided in Paragraphs 10.10.2. and 10.10.3.; or 10.10.1.4. Payments with pending customs entry registration or payments with customs entry registration before the deadline provided in the SIRA declaration, when the customer is within the available amount of up to the equivalent of US$50,000 during the calendar year, in all entities combined.

Under paragraph 10.10.2., transactions authorized for access before the deadline provided in the SIRA declaration with validation in the Single Foreign Trade Current Account system under which entities could provide access to the foreign exchange market to make payments with pending customs registration in the circumstances provided in Paragraphs 10.10.2.1. to 10.10.2.6. (public health goods, energy and fuel, inputs required for national government infrastructure works, and capital goods), provided the operation involved is supported by a SIRA declaration with "EXITED" status to which a period of 0 (zero) calendar days was assigned, the conditions provided in each case were verified, and the remaining applicable regulatory requirements have been met, including the validation in the AFIP computerized Foreign Trade Single Current Account system on the same day as access, or on the previous business day.

Paragraph 10.10.3. provided the transactions authorized for access without validation in the Single Foreign Trade Current Account System, in which entities were allowed to provide access to the foreign exchange market to make payments before the minimum term required for the operation, provided the conditions in Paragraphs 10.10.3.1 to 10.10.3.13. and the remaining applicable regulatory requirements have been met.

Regarding access to the foreign exchange market to process payments for imports of goods for operations in connection with a declaration in the Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI) made while it was in force, or to operations for which the filing of a SIRA declaration was not required for the registration of customs entry of goods, access was governed by the rules provided in Paragraphs 10.11., 10.12., and 10.14.

Effective December 13, 2023, paragraphs 10.10., 10.11., 10.12., 10.13., 10.14., and 12.1. of the TO were repealed by Communication "A" 7917 and in accordance with Paragraph 1.1., a declaration through the SIRA with "EXITED" status will not be required for access to the foreign exchange market, nor will the operation have to be validated in the "Single Foreign Trade Current Account" system, and for purposes of foreign exchange market access for the payment of imports of goods, the conditions provided in Paragraphs 1.2 to 1.6. of that text must be verified.

Import taxes and/or tariffs	Yes.	As a member of MERCOSUR, Argentina applies CET to imports from the rest of the world for almost all products (except automobiles and sugar). The CET rates range from 0% to 35%. The national list of CET exceptions under Decision No. 11/2021 of the Common Market Council (CMC) allows Argentina to increase or decrease import duties from outside the zone on up to 100 tariff items, until December 31, 2028. On the contrary, CMC Decision No. 8/2021 authorizes the States Parties to apply a different rate of the CET for imports of capital goods and information technology and telecommunications goods until December 31, 2028. Both texts were incorporated into the Consolidated National Legislation, and the current lists are provided in the annexes to Decree No. 910/2021. In addition, CMC Decision No. 9/2021 extends until December 31, 2028, the term provided for in Article 11 of CMC Decision No. 27/15, which authorizes a temporary increase in import duties from outside the zone above the CET for 100 tariff positions. The list of tariff positions with import duty levels higher than the CET are contained in Decree No. 541/2019. The current Statistical Rate (for the entire universe of goods, with a few exceptions linked to FTAs, including imports from MERCOSUR, and capital goods used for the hydrocarbon industry) is at a level of 3% (Decree No. 99/2019; by Decree No. 37/1998 it was 0.5%. Decree No. 332/2019 changed it to 2.5%). This rate will be in force, according to the successive extensions established by Decrees No. 1057/2020 and No. 901/2021, at least until December 31, 2024. The 3% tax rate is applied as long as the operations do not exceed certain amounts. That is, there are specific limits that can be charged as a fee, according to the amount of the import operation, these being updated for the last time through the aforementioned Decree No. 99/2019, which are the following: For amounts lower than US$10,000 in imports, the maximum amount to be paid as tariff is the lower of 3% and US$180; For amounts between US$10,000 and US$100,000, the maximum amount to be paid as tariff is the lower of 3% and US$3,000; For amounts between US$100,000 and US$1,000,000, the maximum amount to be paid as tariff is the lower of 3% and US$30,000; For amounts higher than US$1,000,000, the maximum amount to be paid as tariff is the lower of 3% and US$150,000.

Payments for Invisible Transactions and Current Transfers

Controls on these transfers	Yes.
Trade-related payments	Yes.
Prior approval	Yes.	Effective January 7, 2022, Communication “A” 7433 established that institutions were required to verify that a customer has a declaration made through the Integrated System for Monitoring Payments for Services Abroad (SIMPES) with “APPROVED” status, except for transactions involving services provided under codes S02 (Freight services), S03 (Passenger transportation services), S06 (Travel and other card payments), S25 (Government services), S26 (Health services by travel assistance companies), and S27 (Other health services). The preceding requirement did not apply in the event of payment by: (1) the public sector; (2) all business organizations, regardless of their corporate form, in which the national government has a majority stake in the capital or in the adoption of corporate decisions; (3) trusts constituted with contributions from the national public sector; (4) financial institutions for their own imports of services performed by the same institution; or (5) institutions for the cancellation of LCs or guarantee letters issued or granted up through January 6, 2022. proving that, at the time of opening or issuance by the institution, the customer had the declaration made through the SIMPES with "APPROVED" status, with the exceptions indicated above.

Paragraph 3 of Communication "A" 7532 effective June 27, 2022, introduced as an additional requirement for customer transactions covered by the SIMPES or the institution's own transactions involving items for which a declaration in the said system was required for customers, that the institution could only grant access to the foreign exchange market if one of the following conditions were met:

- the institution had an affidavit from the customer stating that the accumulated amount, including the payment to be made, of the payments made by the customer through the foreign exchange market for the services items covered by the SIMPES, in the current calendar year and among the institutions as a whole, did not exceed the amount resulting from the following elements:

- the proportional part, accumulated through the current month, of the total amount of payments made by the importer during the year 2021 for all the items included.

In the event that the latter amount is less than US$50,000, the latter amount or the annual limit, whichever is lower, would be adopted, minus the amount outstanding to date under LCs or guarantee letters issued in its name by local financial institutions for the importation of services.

For the purpose of calculating payments made through the foreign exchange market in the current year and those made in the previous year, no account was required to be taken of those transactions that have been included in the mechanisms set forth in Paragraphs 3.18 and 3.19, or those that corresponded to Items "S08. Insurance premiums" and "S09. Payment of claims."

If the customer has not made payments for the items covered through the foreign exchange market in the previous calendar year, or the payments made were less than the equivalent of US$20,000, the latter value would be taken as the annual limit for the purposes of the provisions of the paragraph in reference. The payment fell under the mechanisms provided for in Paragraphs 3.18. (Certificate of Increase in Exports) and 3.19 (Certificate of Entry of New Financial Debt from Abroad). The payment pertained to Items "S08. Insurance premiums" and "S09. Payment of claims."
Payment would be made 180 calendar days after the date of the effective delivery of the service.
The customer had access simultaneously with the settlement of a new financial debt abroad for which the total principal amount came due after the date of effective delivery of the service plus the time period specified in Paragraph (d);
The customer had access with funds arising from financing of imports of services granted by a local financial institution from a commercial line of credit from abroad and the total principal amount under the financing has a maturity date after the date of effective delivery of the service plus the time period specified in Paragraph (d).

To access the foreign exchange market to make their own payments under LCs or guarantee letters issued or granted as of June 27, 2022, in connection with the importation of services, financial institutions were required to have an affidavit from the customer, made at the time of opening or issuance, stating that this date fell within any of the situations set forth in Paragraphs (a) to (d) of the preceding paragraph.

Access was also allowed for payment on maturity of debts for services, conditional on verification that the operation was declared, if appropriate, in the most recent required submission of the "Survey of External Assets and Liabilities."

The BCRA's prior approval was required for access to the foreign exchange market to prepay debts for services (unless the transaction falls under Paragraph 3.19.1.3 as established by Paragraph 3 of Communication "A" 7516 dated May 19, 2022) and to make payments for services to related foreign counterparties, except for:

-Payments of debt principal on maturity, when the customer has a "Certificate of Increase in Exports of Goods" issued in accordance with Paragraph 3.18 for the equivalent of the amount being paid, incorporated as Paragraph 3.2.7 by Communication "A" 7301 of June 4, 2021; mechanism extended to the year 2022 by Paragraph 6 of Communication "A" 7416 of December 9, 2021.
Payment on maturity of the outstanding debt principal as of June 30, 2021, when the customer has a certificate from an institution issued in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 3.19, for the equivalent of the amount to be paid (Paragraph 3.2.8. incorporated by Communication "A" 7348). Then, Communication "A" 7416 dated December 9, 2021, effective January 3, 2022, payments on maturity of an obligation for a service rendered at least 180 calendar days prior to access or derived from a contract that has been signed a similar period in advance.

Effective January 7, 2022, Communication "A" 7433 established that institutions were required to verify that a customer had a declaration made through the SIMPES with "APPROVED" status, except for transactions involving services provided under codes S02 (Freight services), S03 (Passenger transportation services), S06 (Travel and other card payments), S25 (Government services), S26 (Health services by travel assistance companies), and S27 (Other health services).

The preceding requirement did not apply in the event of payment by: (1) the public sector; (2) all business organizations, regardless of their corporate form, in which the national government has a majority stake in the capital or in the adoption of corporate decisions; (3) trusts constituted with contributions from the national public sector; (4) financial institutions for their own imports of services performed by the same institution; or (5) institutions for the cancellation of LCs or guarantee letters issued or granted up through January 6, 2022.

In the case of LCs or guarantee letters issued or granted on or after January 7, 2022, the institution was required to have documentation proving that, at the time of opening or issuance by the institution, the customer had a declaration made through the SIMPES with "APPROVED" status, with the exceptions indicated above.

Effective June 27, 2022, paragraph 3 of Communication "A" 7532 dated June 27, 2022, introduced as an additional requirement for customer transactions covered by the SIMPES or the institution's own transactions involving items for which a declaration in the said system was required for customers, that the institution could only grant access to the foreign exchange market if one of the following conditions were met:

- the institution had an affidavit from the customer stating that the accumulated amount, including the payment to be made, of the payments made by the customer through the foreign exchange market for the services items covered by the SIMPES, in the current calendar year and among the institutions as a whole, did not exceed the amount resulting from the following elements:

- the proportional part, accumulated through the current month, of the total amount of payments made by the importer during the year 2021 for all the items included.

In the event that the latter amount is less than US$50,000, the latter amount or the annual limit, whichever is lower, was adopted, minus the amount outstanding to date under LCs or guarantee letters issued in its name by local financial institutions for the importation of services.

For the purpose of calculating payments made through the foreign exchange market in the current year and those made in the previous year, no account would be taken of those transactions that have been included in the mechanisms set forth in Paragraphs 3.18 and 3.19, or those corresponding to Items "S08. Insurance premiums" and "S09. Payment of claims."

If the customer has not made payments for the items covered through the foreign exchange market in the previous calendar year, or the payments made were less than the equivalent of US$20,000, the latter value was taken as the annual limit for the purposes of the provisions of this paragraph.

The payment fell under the mechanisms provided for in Paragraphs 3.18. (Certificate of Increase in Exports) and 3.19. (Certificate of Entry of New Financial Debt from Abroad).
The payment pertained to Items “S08. Insurance premiums” and “S09. Payment of claims.”
The payment was made 180 calendar days after the date of the effective delivery of the service.
The customer had access simultaneously with the settlement of a new financial debt abroad for which the total principal amount matured after the date of effective delivery of the service plus the time period specified in Paragraph (d);
- the customer had access with funds arising from financing of imports of services granted by a local financial institution from a commercial line of credit from abroad and the total principal amount under the financing had a maturity date after the date of effective delivery of the service plus the time period specified in Paragraph (d).

To access the foreign exchange market to make their own payments under LCs or guarantee letters issued or granted as of June 27, 2022, in connection with the importation of services, financial institutions were required to have an affidavit from the customer, made at the time of opening or issuance, stating that this date fell within any of the situations set forth in Paragraphs (a) to (d) of the preceding paragraph.

Access was also allowed for payment of debts for services, conditional on verification that the operation was declared, where appropriate, in the most recent required submission of the “Survey of External Assets and Liabilities.”

The BCRA’s prior approval was required for access to the foreign exchange market for early repayment of debts for services (unless the transaction falls under Paragraph 3.19.1.3 as established by Paragraph 3 of Communication “A” 7516 dated May 19, 2022) and to make payments for services to related foreign counterparties, except for, among others:
- Credit card issuers by transfers for tourism and travel as long as they do not correspond to operations that require the prior approval of the BCRA, such as participation in gambling and betting and/or the transfer of funds to accounts with PSPs and/or to investment accounts with investment managers established abroad and/or for foreign exchange operations abroad and/or the purchase of cryptoassets, as set out in Paragraph 4.1.4;
- Local agents collecting funds in Argentina for services provided by nonresidents to residents;
- Transfers by traveler assistance companies for payments of health coverage claims originating in services provided abroad by third parties to their resident customers.

Paragraph 3 of Communication “A” 7622 of October 13, 2022, replaced, from October 17, 2022, the declaration in the SIMPES system with a declaration made in the SIRASE establishing that, in cases in which, to give access to the foreign exchange market to make payments for services provided by nonresidents, a declaration would be required in SIMPES with “APPROVED” status; entities could also accept the filing of a declaration prepared in SIRASE reflecting that status.

Paragraph 3.1. of Communication "A" 7532 did not apply to transactions for which the customer submitted a SIRASE declaration.

Regardless of whether a SIMPES or SIRASE declaration has been submitted, entities were required to consult the status of the transaction with respect to the applicable requirements in the online system implemented by the BCRA for that purpose.

Further, at the time of access to the foreign exchange market, the institution was required to validate the operation in the Computerized Single Foreign Trade Current Account system implemented by AFIP.

Communication "A" 7914 of December 7, 2023, updated the TO, and Paragraph 3.2 was updated to include the amendments released through Communications "A" 7532, 7542, 7547, 7553, 7594, 7606, 7622, 7626, 7664, 7746, 7762, 7771, 7815, 7864, 7866, 7893, 7903, and 7914.

Paragraph 3.2 of the TO de EyC provided payments for services provided by nonresidents not related to the customer could be made, subject to the following requirements:

(1) The existence of the service can be documented. (Paragraph 3.2.1.).

(2) The customer has the declaration prepared through the SIRASE with "APPROVED" status, except for operations that corresponded to the services that were carried out with Codes
S03. Passenger transportation services,
S06. Travel (excluding transactions associated with withdrawals and/or consumption with cards of residents with nonresident suppliers or of nonresidents with Argentine suppliers),
S25. Government services,
S26. Health services by travel assistance companies,
S27. Other health services,
S29. Operations associated with withdrawals and/or consumption with cards of residents with nonresident suppliers or of nonresidents with Argentine suppliers,
This requirement will not be applicable when the following payments are involved:
(a) imports of own services by financial institutions, or
(b) institutions for the cancellation of LCs or guarantee letters issued or granted up through January 6, 2022 (Paragraph 3.2.2.).

(3) Access is also allowed for payment on maturity of commercial debts for services, conditional on verification that the operation was declared, if appropriate, in the most recent required submission of the "Survey of External Assets and Liabilities" (Paragraph 3.2.4.).

The BCRA's prior approval is required for access to the foreign exchange market to prepay debts for services, unless the transaction falls under Paragraph 3.19.1.3.

For purposes of access to the foreign exchange market, commercial debts for service imports should be considered debts arising from the acquisition of services from nonresidents that are similar to those provided in Paragraph 10.2.4. for imports of goods.

(4) For payment of services to related counterparties abroad, Paragraph 3.2.5. established the deadline of December 13, 2023 (pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Communication "A" 7917) for which prior approval of the BCRA was required, except for:

Debts arising from the provision of services by related counterparties will continue to be covered by the requirement for prior approval, even when the creditor or debtor has been amended so that no connection remains between the creditor and the resident debtor.

(5) Financial institutions will have access to the foreign exchange market to make their own payments by LC or endorsed letter issued or granted to guarantee imports of services, provided they are confirmed to have met the conditions that were applicable according to the date on which the LC or endorsed letter was issued or granted.

(Paragraph 3.2.6.)

Paragraph 4.3. of the TO de EyC, introduced by Communication "A" 7340, establishes that securities purchase and sale transactions with settlement in foreign currency must be paid through one of the following mechanisms:

Under no circumstances may these transactions be settled through payment in foreign currency banknotes or through their deposit in custodial accounts or in accounts of third parties.
Communication "A" 7551 effective July 21, 2022, incorporated into Paragraph 4.4. of the TO provided, with respect to operations with securities on account and by order of nonresident tourists that the institutions were authorized to receive foreign banknotes from nonresident tourists to carry out, on account and by order of them, the purchase of securities with settlement in foreign exchange for their subsequent sale with settlement in pesos, in accordance with the applicable regulations issued by the National Securities Commission (CNV). These transactions are carried out exclusively in the capital market and consist of the purchase of negotiable instruments (notes or securities) traded in pesos in the local market (markets regulated by the CNV) and then sold in foreign markets where such negotiable instruments are also traded, and there they are settled in foreign currency.

Agents that manage collective investment products for mutual funds will continue to report on the composition of the net assets of the fund and the holdings of shares of nonresidents, for each country. (3) Collective deposit agents must submit the following information, on a monthly basis, within 10 business days from the end of each calendar month, through the financial information highway: (a) Balances of

		for the following purposes: (i) the conversion between common stock and CEDEARs or ADRs, regardless of the direction of the conversion, will also be considered as a transfer of negotiable securities to or from foreign depositaries; and (ii) in purchase transactions, the purchase price agreed in said transaction will be considered; and for outward transfers, conversions, and sales of negotiable securities with settlement in foreign exchange, the price in pesos of the asset in question on the previous day will be used. Sale or issue locally by nonresidents	Yes.	Under the CNV regulations, foreign and Argentine issuers must meet the same requirements for public offerings of securities in Argentina. Foreign issuers must establish a permanent representative office and a domicile in Argentina to receive notices. Foreign issuers must state whether the securities are also being offered to the public in their country of origin and indicate all initial and periodic reporting requirements applicable to them. If the CNV determines that the regulations in the country of origin properly protect local investors and ensure an adequate flow of information, it may relax the requirements for those issuers. The CNV may authorize foreign issuers on a case-by-case basis to submit only such information as they would periodically submit to the corresponding authority in their jurisdiction of origin. Issuers of securities offered publicly in Argentina and abroad must submit all information required by the entities authorizing the foreign public offering and listing to the CNV in Spanish. The financial statements at the close of the fiscal year, in all cases, must be presented to include supplementary information to reconcile the effects on net equity and net earnings of accounting mechanisms other than those current in the Republic of Argentina, stating the exchange rate used to convert the items mentioned to Argentine pesos. Where the annual financial information is concerned, and for intermediate periods, publications may be issued without the indicated reconciliation. In such case, it should be clearly stated that the information was prepared in accordance with the current accounting standards in the country of origin, and that they are presented without being reconciled with Argentina's accounting standards. Nonresidents are subject to the same conditions as residents with regard to the sale or issue of shares or other equity securities. Paragraph 3.13 (which incorporates Paragraph 7 of Com "A" 6770, as amended by Communications "A" 6815 and 6855) establishes that access to the foreign exchange market by nonresident customers for the purchase of foreign exchange for the repatriation of portfolio investments requires the prior approval of the BCRA, with various exceptions including international organizations, official export credit agencies, and diplomatic and consular offices. Residents and nonresidents can do transactions known as CCL. These transactions are carried out exclusively in the capital market and consist of the purchase of negotiable instruments (notes or securities) traded in pesos in the local market (markets regulated by the CNV) and then sold in foreign markets where such negotiable instruments are also traded, and there they are settled in foreign currency.

Under no circumstances may these transactions be settled through payment in foreign currency banknotes or through their deposit in custodial accounts or in accounts of third parties. Communication "A" 7551 effective July 21, 2022, incorporated in Paragraph 4.4. of the TO provided, with respect to operations with securities on account and by order of nonresident tourists that the institutions were authorized to receive foreign banknotes from nonresident tourists to carry out, on account and by order of them, the purchase of securities with settlement in foreign exchange for their subsequent sale with settlement in pesos, in accordance with the applicable regulations issued by the CNV. Residents and nonresidents can do transactions known as CCL. These transactions are carried out exclusively in the capital market and consist of the purchase of negotiable instruments (notes or securities) traded in pesos in the local market (markets regulated by the CNV) and then sold in foreign markets where such negotiable instruments are also traded, and there they are settled in foreign currency. This new law also provides for the creation of a PSAV Registry in charge of the National Securities Commission (CNV, by its acronym in Spanish), with the CNV being the regulator of the capital market. Minimum financing requirements	03/04/2022	Goods with tariff positions indicated in Paragraphs 10.10.1 (luxury consumer goods) access to the foreign exchange market must take place as of 180 (previously 90) calendar days of the date of registration of clearance through customs of the said goods.
	03/04/2022	Paragraph 5 of Communication "A" 7466 dated March 3, 2022, issued requirements for cases in which the imported goods are not included in the time periods set forth in Paragraphs 10.3.2.5 or 10.3.2.6 and declaration in the Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI) is a requirement for registration of the customs entry of the goods.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

In this regard, it was established, within the framework of the SIMI, how the Central Bank of the Argentine Republic (BCRA) assigns the categories to each one that is officially registered in the SIMI as from March 4, 2022, once the latter has obtained the "EXITED" status based on the intervention of the competent agencies in the matter, and how the said category will define the minimum time periods for access to the foreign exchange market to make payments for the goods included in the SIMI.

A Category A, which maintains the same regulatory treatment for the associated transactions, and a Category B, which means that the associated imports of goods must be financed at least 180 days from the date of registration of the customs entry of the goods into Argentina.

The BCRA assigns to each importer for the year 2022 a limit for SIMI Category A, for goods not included in the exceptions provided for, which will be equivalent to the lesser of the following two amounts:

(1) The free on board (FOB) value of its imports for the year 2021 plus 5% of the said value.
(2) The FOB value of its imports for the year 2020 plus 70% of the said value.

In the calculation of the FOB value of imports for the years 2020 and 2021, imports registered in the importer's name in the Import Payments Tracking System that granted access to the foreign exchange market will be taken into account, except those corresponding to temporary imports or goods included in the exceptions provided for.

The amount of Category A assigned by the BCRA will be the equivalent of US$50,000 when the customer has not registered imports in the last two years or when the amount resulting from the indicated calculation is lower.

The limit for SIMI Category A at each point will be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of each category accumulated up to and including the current month. The equivalent of 20% of the corresponding annual limit will be added to the said amount, provided this does not mean that said limit will be exceeded. In the event that the amount indicated for a category is less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the corresponding annual limit, whichever is lower, will be adopted.

Among the exceptions provided for, the following are contemplated: payments for imports with SIMI Category B declaration and the goods paid for are capital goods or consist of kits for the detection of the COVID-19 coronavirus or other goods whose tariff positions are included in the list published by Decree No. 333/2020 and its supplementary provisions or concern goods subject to non-automatic import licenses.

03/11/2022 Considering the particularities of certain goods to be imported: petroleum or bituminous mineral oils, their preparations and their waste or petroleum gases and other gaseous hydrocarbons, exceptions to the 180-day period were included.

03/18/2022 Considering the particularities of certain goods to be imported: non-agglomerated bituminous coal, exceptions to the 180-day period were included.

03/22/2022 The time period for a group of goods (import of fertilizers and/or phytosanitary products and/or inputs that are necessary for the local elaboration of the same) was reduced to 90 calendar days.

04/07/2022 Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI) Category C was introduced, whereby, for certain tariff positions of raw materials and standardized inputs and under certain conditions, a treatment similar to Category A was established.

The annual limit of SIMI Category C to be assigned by the Central Bank of the Argentine Republic (BCRA) will be the difference between the limit assigned by the BCRA to Category A and the higher of the two amounts considered for the purposes of establishing the said limit. It was also established that the limit for SIMI Category C at each point in time will be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit accumulated up to and including the current month. The equivalent of 20% of the annual limit will be added to the said amount, provided this does not mean that the said limit will be exceeded. In the event that the amount indicated is less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the annual limit, whichever is lower, will be adopted.

Later, as indicated in Communication "A" 7490 of April 12, 2022, the TO de EyC was updated and these rules were included in Paragraph 10.14.

05/05/2022 Communications "A" 7507 of May 5, 2022, "A" 7516 of May 19, 2022, and "A" 7528 of June 16, 2022, included transactions exempted related with pharmaceutical products, its production inputs and other items related with health (under the conditions specifically provided for in each case) from compliance with the minimum financing period.

06/27/2022 (1) It was established that up to September 30, 2022, the limit of Integrated Import Monitoring System (SIMI) Category A or C at each point in time will be equivalent to the proportional part of the annual limit of each category accumulated up to and including the current month. In the event that the amount indicated for a category is less than US$250,000, the latter amount or the corresponding annual limit, whichever is lower, will be adopted. Meaning that up to September 30, 2022, the equivalent of 20% of the annual limit will not be added to the said amount.
(2) The exception foreseen for goods subject to non-automatic import licenses was suspended until September 30, 2022, establishing that while such suspension lasts, imports of such goods for the years 2020 and 2021 will be taken into consideration for the computation of the limits for Categories A and C.

07/01/2022 The annual limit of Category A for an importer must be, at a minimum, equivalent to 115% of the computable Free on Board value of its imports for the year 2021, when the amount imported in the said year was less than or equal to the equivalent of US $1,000,000. The new calculation form is more flexible.

10/01/2022 The conditions that were set up until September 30, 2022, expired. Therefore, the equivalent of 20% of the annual limit is added to the limit of Integrated Import Monitoring System Category A or C, and the exception for goods subject to non-automatic import licenses became effective again.

01/01/2023 Communication "A" 7638 replaced Paragraph 2.1 of Communication "A" 7532, providing that institutions were required to have an affidavit from the customer in which they confirm that the figure obtained by adding the amount of the payment whose execution is being requested to the total payments executed as of January 1, 2022, not corresponding to operations listed in Paragraph 2.2 of that Communication, did not exceed the equivalent of the amount obtained by multiplying one-twelfth of the annual limit of SIMI Category A provided in Paragraph 10.14.1 of the External Affairs and Foreign Exchange Regulations by the number of months between January 2022 and the current month, inclusively.

12/13/2023 Paragraphs 10.10., 10.12., and 10.14. of the TO were repealed by Communication "A" 7917 and it introduced new rules on access to foreign exchange for the processing of import payments as follows:

Paragraph 1.1. provided it would not be necessary to have a declaration prepared through the Argentine Republic Import System with "EXITED" status as a requirement for access to the foreign exchange market, or to validate the operation in the computerized Single Foreign Trade Current Account System.

Paragraph 1.2. established different minimum periods for access to the foreign exchange market to process import payments with customs entry registration from December 13, 2023, according to the following system:

All other goods: 25% per month as of day 30.

According to Paragraph 1.3., access before these periods have ended requires prior approval from the Central Bank of the Argentine Republic (BCRA), except when the payment is subject to any of the conditions provided in Paragraph 3, which primarily involves payments made on a financed basis, with funds from goods import financing granted by a local financial institution from a foreign credit facility (Paragraph 3.1) or simultaneous access with settlement of funds in the form of external advances or prefinancing of exports, or export prefinancing granted by local financial institutions funded with foreign credit facilities, subject to conditions (Paragraph 3.2) or with settlement of a new external financial debt (Paragraph 3.3), inter alia.

According to Paragraph 1.4., access to the foreign exchange market for import payments pending customs entry registration required the prior approval of the BCRA, unless the payment was subject to one of the conditions provided in Paragraph 3.

According to Paragraph 1.5., access to the foreign exchange market to execute import payments for goods for which the customs entry registration was made by December 12, 2023, in addition to the remaining applicable requirements, is subject to the prior approval of the BCRA, except when:
- The payment corresponds to transactions financed or guaranteed by local or foreign financial institutions or by international organizations and/or official credit agencies; or
- For the equivalent of the amount payable, the customer has a Certificate for regimes to access foreign exchange for incremental production of oil and/or natural gas (Decree No. 277/22) issued as provided in Paragraph 3.21.; or

Communication "A" 7935 of December 28, 2023 subsequently extended the BOPREAL subscription deadline until January 31, 2024. Stabilized arrangement	Yes.	The de jure exchange rate arrangement is free floating. The CBA intervenes in the foreign exchange market only to smooth excessive exchange rate volatility, defined as short-term, high-frequency exchange rate movements caused by speculative or trend following elements rather than underlying macroeconomic fundamentals. The CBA intervenes anonymously mainly via auctions of foreign exchange, or openly in the interbank market, or through the stock exchange. The CBA publishes weekly intervention data through the stock exchange only on its website every Monday and publishes daily foreign exchange auction results on the local interbank platform. Since October 2022, the exchange rate stabilized within a 2% band against the US dollar with one realignment in February 2023. Therefore, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified to stabilized from floating, effective October 28, 2022.

Exchange rates of other currencies relative to US dollar are taken from reliable or widely used sources as of 15:00 Yerevan time. Prices of gold and silver in AMD are calculated based on the prices published by the London Bullion Market Association (previously, the official exchange rate against the US dollar is set as the weighted average of the buying and selling rates in the foreign exchange market. For other currencies, except for the SDRs of IMF, the official average exchange rates of Armenian dram are set as cross-rates using US dollar's official exchange rate against corresponding currencies and

Floating
Free floating	Yes.	Both the de jure and de facto exchange rate arrangements are classified as free floating. However, the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) retains discretionary authority to intervene in the foreign exchange market and has done so during periods of significant market disorder and/or gross misalignment of the exchange rate. Given the high level of development of the Australian foreign exchange market, interventions have been rare. The most recent period of intervention was in 2007–2008 and was in response to episodes of significant market disorder – that is, instances when market functioning was impaired to such a degree that it was clear that the observed volatility was excessive. The RBA may also vary the way intervention is conducted; it may enter the interbank foreign exchange market directly through voice or electronic brokerage platforms or use an agent bank. As a matter of government policy, most wholesale purchases of foreign currency by government agencies are made through the RBA. The RBA manages the flows from purchases on behalf of the government so as to minimize their market impact – for example, by executing these trades when the market is liquid and, if necessary, breaking up the required purchases into a series of smaller transactions. Monthly purchases and sales of foreign exchange are published on the RBA website. Daily data on foreign exchange market interventions are published on the RBA website annually, following the release of the RBA Annual Report.
Official exchange rate	Yes.	There is no official RBA fixing rate for the Australian dollar. World Market/Reuters provide hourly fixing rates for the Australian dollar against the US dollar. For public information, the RBA publishes an Australian dollar–US dollar reference rate based on the 4:00 p.m. Australian Eastern Standard Time World Market/Reuters Australian dollar fixing rate and the trade-weighted index of the Australian dollar based on market rates at 4:00 p.m. The RBA also publishes the Australian dollar cross-rates for all currencies in the trade-weighted index.

Government and Central Bank	Yes.	The Reserve Bank Act 1959 provides for decisions of the Reserve Bank Board on monetary policy to be reached by a majority of the votes of the members present and voting, with the Chair having a casting vote, if necessary, in addition to a deliberative vote. Votes are not published. The Statement on the Conduct of Monetary Policy (the Statement) has recorded the common understanding of the Governor, as Chair of the Reserve Bank Board, and the government on key aspects of Australia's monetary and central banking policy framework since 1996. The Statement seeks to foster a sound understanding of the nature of the relationship between the Reserve Bank and the government, the objectives of monetary policy, the mechanisms for ensuring transparency and accountability in the way policy is conducted, and the independence of the Reserve Bank. The inflation target is set as part of the agreement on the monetary policy framework, and the key features of the target cannot be changed by the Bank unilaterally.
Inflation target	Yes.
Target number	Yes.
Point target
Target with tolerance band
Band/Range	Yes.	Both the RBA Governor and the government agree that a flexible medium-term inflation target is the appropriate framework for achieving medium-term price stability. They agree that an appropriate goal is to keep consumer price inflation between 2% and 3%, on average, over time. This formulation allows for the natural short-run variation in inflation over the economic cycle, and the medium-term focus provides the flexibility for the Reserve Bank to set its policy so as best to achieve its broad objectives, including financial stability. The 2%–3% medium-term goal provides a clearly identifiable performance benchmark over time.
Target measure	Yes.
CPI	Yes.	The target measure is end-year growth in the CPI. The CPI measures the changes in the price of a "basket" of goods and services, which account for a high proportion of expenditure by the CPI population group (that is, metropolitan households).
Core inflation
Target horizon	Yes.	The inflation target is defined as a medium-term average rather than as a rate (or band of rates) that must be held at all times.
Operating target (policy rate)	Yes.
Policy rate	Yes.	The RBA's monetary policy involves setting a target for the interest rate on unsecured overnight loans in the money market ("the cash rate"), with the interest rate on Exchange Settlement balances set at 10 bps below that target. The RBA's target for the cash rate was 1.35% as of July 31, 2022.
Target corridor band	Yes.	The RBA's cash rate target is expressed as a point target. The RBA pays an interest rate on Exchange Settlement balances held in accounts with the RBA that is set at a margin below the cash rate target. The RBA is also willing to lend Exchange Settlement balances overnight to banks if this is required. The interest rate on these loans is set at a margin above the cash rate target under its standing facilities. Banks have an incentive to borrow as little as possible at this rate, and instead prefer to borrow at the lower cash rate in the interbank market. The overnight deposit and lending rates form the lower and upper bounds of the policy interest rate corridor. The lower bound of the corridor is set at 10 basis points below the cash rate target, while the top of the corridor is set at 25 basis points above the target cash rate. Given the large amount of liquidity in the banking system, the cash rate is trading at a margin above the bottom of the corridor but a little below the cash rate target.

Accountability	Yes.
Open letter	No.
Parliamentary hearings	Yes.	As part of accountability arrangements, the Governor, Deputy Governor, and two other senior officers of the Reserve Bank usually appear twice-yearly before the House of Representatives Standing Committee on Economics. Between January 1, 2022, and June 30, 2023, the RBA appeared at two regular public hearings of this committee. Senior staff are also periodically invited to give evidence at public hearings held as part of inquiries by other committees of both houses of parliament.
Other	No.
Transparency	Yes.
Publication of votes	No.
Publication of minutes	Yes.	Minutes of the monetary policy meetings of the Reserve Bank Board are published two weeks after each meeting. (The Reserve Bank Board usually meets 11 times each year, on the first Tuesday of each month, except January.) Minutes were first published in December 2007, when minutes for meetings from October 2006 onward were also released.
Publication of inflation forecasts	Yes.	Inflation forecasts are published every quarter in the RBA's Statement of Monetary Policy.
Other monetary framework
Exchange tax	No.
Exchange subsidy	No.
Foreign exchange market	Yes.	Licensed dealers of foreign exchange are allowed to freely determine their bid-ask spreads and foreign exchange commissions in transactions with their clients.
Spot exchange market	Yes.	The Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) is responsible for licensing of all financial services providers, including foreign exchange dealers that deal in foreign currency contracts, whether exchange traded or over the counter, by its administration of the Australian financial services license (AFSL) regime. As of July 31, 2023, there were 1,293 licensees licensed to deal in foreign exchange products in Australia; 598 of these are licensed to deal with retail investors. Licensed foreign exchange dealers that deal in foreign currency contracts are permitted to maintain accounts abroad and to make foreign currency payments and transfers on behalf of their clients. The ASIC does not license entities dealing in spot foreign exchange contracts.

Interbank market	Yes.	As of April 30, 2022, the RBA survey of foreign exchange turnover indicates that at least 23 financial institutions participate in the Australian interbank foreign exchange market. The Australian dollar is also widely traded by financial institutions in offshore interbank markets. There are no limits on the bid-ask spread and commission of market participants. Interventions in the Australian foreign exchange market are rare, given the high level of market development. However, if the RBA were to intervene, the intervention could be conducted either directly with market participants at their quoted rates, via market makers, or by placing an interest in an electronic system whereby a market maker would have to accept the quoted price.
Over the counter	Yes.	Turnover occurs almost entirely over the counter with licensed dealers. ASIC grants licenses to Derivatives Trade Repositories who report on OTC derivatives transactions.
Brokerage	Yes.	Licensed dealers may deal among themselves and with their overseas counterparties at mutually negotiated rates for spot transactions in any currency for trade- and non-trade-related transactions. Trading is conducted through several mediums, including electronic broking platforms.
Market making	Yes.	An ASIC license is generally required for foreign exchange dealing (other than spot). An AFSL and authorization to make a market for foreign exchange products and derivatives are required, subject to some exemptions, such as Regulation No. 7.6.02AG. As of August 30, 2023, there were 222 licensees authorized to make a market in derivatives, 177 authorized to make a market in foreign exchange, and 143 authorized to make a market in both derivatives and foreign exchange. Pursuant to Section 766D of the Corporations Act, persons make a market for a financial product if (1) they regularly state the prices at which they propose to acquire or dispose of financial products on their own behalf, (2) others have a reasonable expectation that they will be able to regularly effect transactions at the stated prices, and (3) the persons' actions do not constitute a financial market under Section 767A.
Forward exchange market	Yes.	Active trading takes place in forward and futures contracts, which under Corporations Act are regulated as derivatives (Corporations Act s761D and Corporations Regulation 7.1.04). The RBA uses foreign exchange swaps in its foreign exchange reserves management and has used these in the past for its domestic liquidity operations. Foreign exchange swaps by the RBA are executed with market participants in the market and at market prices. Foreign exchange swaps have previously been used to augment liquidity operations in domestic securities.

		assistance or training or another service to the Government of Syria, or their public bodies, corporations, or agencies, including persons, entities, or bodies acting on their behalf or at their direction and entities or bodies owned or controlled by them, if it assists with, or is provided in relation to an activity involving the supply, sale, transfer import, purchase, or transport of certain items including gold. With respect to Russia, it is prohibited to purchase, import, or transport "import sanctioned goods" exported from or originating in Russia without a sanctions permit. Gold (including bullion and investment products) became an "import sanctioned good" from Russia effective September 30, 2022.
Controls on exports and imports of banknotes	No.	Exports and imports of $A 10,000 in cash or more, or the foreign currency equivalent must be reported to the Australian Transaction Reports and Analysis Centre (AUSTRAC) chief executive officer (CEO), a police officer, or an Australian Border Force officer for transmission to the AUSTRAC for anti-Money-Laundering and Counter-Terrorism Financing (AML/CTF) purposes. Australian law also prohibits the provision to any person of technical advice, assistance, or training; financial assistance; a financial service; or another services if it assists with or is provided in relation to either: the direct or indirect supply, sale, or transfer to Syria, for use in Syria or for the benefit of Syria of "export sanctioned goods"; or the manufacture, maintenance, or use of an "export sanctioned good" for Syria, without a sanctions permit. With respect to the DPRK, Australian law also prohibits the transfer to another person of any financial or other assets or resources (including bulk cash) which could contribute to the nuclear or ballistic missile programs, or other WMD programs, of the DPRK, or activities prohibited, or the evasion of measures imposed, by any relevant UNSC Resolution regarding the DPRK.

Some goods (restricted goods) are prohibited from import unless certain conditions are met, the goods are exempt, and/or written permission from a relevant authority is provided. These controls and prohibitions reflect mainly law enforcement, health, environmental and safety requirements; requirements for labeling, packaging, and technical specifications; autonomous sanctions; and obligations of international agreements or UNSC sanctions. Goods which are restricted are certain types of narcotic and psychotropic, substances; drugs, medicines, and antibiotic substances; therapeutic substances; tablet presses, and encapsulators; drug paraphernalia; counterfeit credit, debit, and charge cards; tobacco products; firearms, weapons, and warfare goods; including chemical weapons, plastic explosives and ammonium nitrate, radioactive substances, and nuclear material; cloned human embryo material; goods with false trade descriptions; goods that infringe trademarks or copyright; images and indicia for major sporting events; goods representing the arms, flag, or seal of an Australian Sate or Territory or of the Commonwealth or the Royal Arms; ANZAC goods; wool packs; pronged dog collars; cat and dog fur; certain hazardous industrial and pesticide chemicals; asbestos and goods containing asbestos; specimens of CITES-listed endangered species; consumer safety goods such as glazed ceramic ware, toys and cosmetics that contain hazardous amounts of lead or other metals; rough diamonds; incandescent lightbulbs; lighters; signal jammers; cultural heritage items; objectionable material including child pornography and terrorism-related goods; tooth fish; ozone-depleting substances; and synthetic greenhouse gases. The Biosecurity Act 2015 and its subordinate legislation apply controls to the importation of all plants, parts of plants, and plant products, all animals (including birds, fish, and insects), animal products, soil, and other items of general quarantine concern. The importation of arms or related material is prohibited under the sanctions regimes for the DPRK, Iran, Libya, and Russia. Arms or related material is defined broadly and includes, but is not limited to, weapons, ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, and spare parts for any of those things, as well as paramilitary equipment.

In addition to these restrictions, there are other restrictions on imports which relate to each specific sanctions regime.

With respect to a specified Ukraine region (which currently includes Crimea, Donetsk, Luhansk, and Sevastopol), Australian law prohibits the import, purchase, or transport of any goods, without a sanctions permit, if the goods originate in, or are exported from, a specified Ukraine region (except certain goods, which have been made available to the Ukrainian authorities for examination and for which compliance with conditions conferring entitlement to preferential origin has been verified by Ukrainian officials).

With respect to the DPRK, under the UNSC sanctions, it is also prohibited to procure from the DPRK, or from a person or entity in the DPRK, any of the following “import sanctioned goods”; and a permit cannot be obtained to authorize their import: certain items relevant to nuclear, ballistic missiles, and other WMD-related programs; certain arms-related items listed in Resolution No. 1718 (2016) of the Security Council, subparagraph 8(a)(1) and (2) (such as battle tanks, combat vehicles, and aircraft); gold, titanium ore, vanadium ore, or rare earth minerals; goods mentioned in paragraph 5(1)(c) of the Charter of the UN (Sanctions – DPRK) Regulations 2008; copper, nickel, silver, or zinc; statues; coal, iron, or iron ore; lead or lead ore; seafood; textiles; or goods covered by Chapters 07, 08, 12, 25, 44, 84, 85, or 89 of the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding Systems. The following “import sanctioned goods” cannot be procured, received, or transported from the DPRK, or from a person or entity in the DPRK, without a permit, which may be granted in certain circumstances: statues, textiles, coals; and any goods that are not “specified import sanctioned goods” and not food or medicine. Australian law also prohibits the receipt of “import sanctioned goods” from the DPRK, or a person or entity in the DPRK, if the goods are received for the purposes of repair, servicing, refurbishing, testing, reverse engineering, or marketing by the person or another person if it is not authorized by a sanctions permit.

		With respect to Iraq, it is prohibited to hold, use, or deal with a "controlled asset" or allow or facilitate the use of it. A "controlled asset" is an asset: (1) of the government led by Saddam Hussein (including a state body, corporation, or other body or agency) that was located in Australia on May 22, 2003; and (2) that has been removed from Iraq, or acquired, by a person or entity designated for the purposes of the Iraq sanctions regime. It is also prohibited to deal with an item of Iraqi cultural property or of archaeological, historical, cultural, rare scientific, or religious importance that has been illegally removed from Iraq on or after August 6, 1990. With respect to Somalia, under UNSC sanctions, it is prohibited to import charcoal from Somalia or from a person or entity in Somalia. With respect to Syria, it is prohibited to import, purchase, or transport certain crude oil, petroleum, and petrochemical products if they originate in or have been exported from Syria, without a sanctions permit. It is also prohibited to import or purchase gold, precious metals, or diamonds from the Government of Syria or an entity or body owned or controlled by it or acting on its behalf or direction, without a sanctions permit. It is also prohibited to give "illegally removed cultural property" to another person, to trade in it, or to transfer the ownership of it to another person. "Illegally removed cultural property" means an item of Syrian cultural property; or of archaeological, historical, cultural, rare scientific, or religious importance that has been illegally removed from Syria on or after March 15, 2011. The targeted financial sanctions outlined in category II "Exchange Measures" above prohibit providing assets to a proscribed or designated person or entity. With respect to Russia, it is prohibited to purchase, import, or transport "import sanctioned goods" exported from or originating in Russia without a sanctions permit. Coal, oils, and their derivative products became "import sanctioned goods" from Russia effective April 25, 2022.
Open general licenses	Yes.	Australia implemented the G7 Oil Price Cap on Russian oil and petroleum products by issuing four general permits open to use by companies who engage with the oil and petroleum trade (mainly companies providing vessel insurance and reinsurance), the first of which was issued effective December 4, 2022, and the rest were issued effective February 15, 2023. Russian oil and petroleum products are "import sanctioned goods;" therefore, the general permits allow certain financial services to be provided in relation to the transport of Russian origin oil and petroleum products at or below the price cap that would normally constitute a "sanctioned import," or a "sanctioned service" provided in relation to a sanctioned import. These general permits do not authorize the import of Russian oil and petroleum products into Australia.

Other nontariff measures	No.
Import taxes and/or tariffs	Yes.	Most agricultural products enter Australia duty-free. A maximum tariff of 5% applies to some manufactured goods, including household textile products. Tariffs on many goods have been eliminated. Because of the final phase down of duty rates under the Expanded Information Technology Agreement, the general rate of customs duty is "free" for all goods for which Australia committed to providing duty-free access under the Expanded Information Technology Agreement.

Tariff concessions are available under the Tariff Concession System for most goods subject to a tariff, if no domestic manufacturers produce substitutable goods. Other concessions are available for specific purposes, such as to accommodate split import consignments donations and bequests.
A temporary concession in relation to COVID-19 was provided for medical and hygiene goods. Effective July 1, 2022, a revised concession was implemented permanently and expanded in scope to also include medical products or hygiene products covered by Customs Tariff By-law 2200082; ingredients to be used in the production of medicaments covered by Customs Tariff By-law No. 2200083; and containers for medicaments covered by Customs Tariff By-law No. 2200084.

Australia currently has 18 plurilateral or bilateral FTAs in force. All tariffs are eliminated under 15 out of the 18 of these FTAs:
Australia–New Zealand Closer Economic Relations Trade Agreement;
Singapore–Australia FTA;
Australia–United States FTA;
Thailand–Australia FTA;
Australia–Chile FTA;
Agreement Establishing the ASEAN–Australia–New Zealand FTA;
Malaysia–Australia FTA;
Korea–Australia FTA;
Japan–Australia Economic Partnership Agreement;
China–Australia FTA;
Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership (CPTPP);
FTA between Australia and Hong Kong, China;
Indonesia–Australia Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement;
Peru–Australia FTA (tariff elimination effective January 1, 2023);
PACER Plus.

The Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership entered into force effective January 1, 2022. Australia eliminated tariffs on 77% of tariff lines on entry into force and 98% are to be eliminated by January 1, 2041.

The Australia–India Economic Cooperation and Trade Agreement entered into force effective December 29, 2022. Tariffs were eliminated on entry into force for all but 116 tariff lines in Chapters 72, 73, 76, and 90, which will be progressively eliminated by January 1, 2026.

The Australia–United Kingdom FTA entered into force effective May 31, 2023. Australia eliminated tariffs on all tariff lines except 5 lines of Chapter 4 and 89 lines of Chapter 72 and 73, which will be progressively eliminated by January 1, 2028, and January 1, 2027, respectively. Further, tariff reductions on 18 tariff lines and part of twelve tariff lines Chapter 72 and 73 are suspended while the United Kingdom maintains a global safeguard on the same products.

Australia provides duty-free, quota-free access for goods produced or manufactured in 50 least developed countries under the Australian System of Tariff Preferences, Australia's GSP Scheme. In addition, Australia maintains a range of historic preferences for developing countries ranging from 11 countries and places where all but 101 tariff lines are 0; 106 countries and places with 877 tariff lines that are reduced or eliminated; 4 countries and places with 196 tariff lines that are reduced or eliminated. Further Forum Island Countries are provided duty-free, quota-free access under the South Pacific Regional Trade and Economic Co-operation Agreement. Papua New Guinea, who is a member of South Pacific Regional Trade and Economic Co-operation Agreement, also has duty-free, quota-free access under the Agreement on Trade and Commercial Relations between the Government of Australia and the Government of Papua New Guinea (PATCRA II). Finally, Australia maintains a range of historic preferences for a limited number of goods from Canada and Malaysia. Effective July 1, 2022, Australia provides a reduced rate of duty to goods produced or manufactured in Ukraine in accordance with Australian Customs Notice 2022-32 and 2023-29. Effective April 25, 2022, the MFN treatment previously accorded to goods imported from Russia and Belarus was removed and a temporary additional customs duty of 35% applies in addition to the general rate of customs duty that applies to goods that are the produce or last place of manufacture of Russia and Belarus, where these have left for direct shipment to Australia from a place of manufacture or warehouse in a country from which the goods were exported after April 25, 2022. The measure has been extended until October 24, 2023, under Australian Customs Notice 2022-45. Tariff quotas apply to certain types of cheese and curd that may be imported at a concessional rate of duty of $A 0.096/kg and is restricted to 11,500 tons a year. Imports may be made outside the 11,500 ton quota allocated each year, but a higher rate of duty of $A 1.220/kg applies. Reductions and elimination of tariffs exclude excise-equivalent customs duty such as on alcohol, fuel, and tobacco.

Other	Yes.	The Export Control Act 2020 sets out the overarching legal framework for the regulation of exported goods, including food and agricultural products, from Australia. It enables the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry to make rules that detail the requirements and establish conditions for exporting certain goods from Australia. The Export Control Rules 2021 are legislative instruments (LIs) made by the Secretary under Section 432 of the Act and set out the operational requirements that must be met to export specific goods from Australia. These conditions ensure any importing country requirements are satisfied, and that the export conforms with requirements and industry standards and meets Australia's international obligations. In accordance with the requirements of the Export Control Act 2020 and its associated Rules and Orders, an exporter is required to demonstrate, for the purpose of exporting prescribed agricultural goods, that the goods were produced and/or prepared at an exported registered establishment/accredited property for the purpose of supporting an application for export permits and other certification necessary to accompany prescribed agriculture export consignments. Documentation requirements also apply for the export of non-prescribed agricultural goods.
Export licenses	Yes.
Without quotas	Yes.	Export prohibitions and restrictions enforce quality control measures, administer UNSC and Australian autonomous sanctions, and meet obligations under international treaties and commitments under international arrangements. Australia's export control policies reflect the government's commitment to ensure that exports of defense and dual-use goods are consistent with Australia's interests, international obligations, and commitments. Prohibitions also maintain adequate measures of control over designated cultural property, resources, protected flora; and fauna; secure conservation objectives; and respond to specific market distortions abroad. Australia's customs legislation prohibits absolutely the export of some goods, which are documents and devices relating to suicide. Some goods (restricted goods) are prohibited from export unless certain conditions are met, the goods are exempt, and/or written permission from a relevant authority is provided. Restricted goods are certain types of: objectionable goods; asbestos and goods containing asbestos; hazardous industrial and pesticide chemicals; toothfish; human embryo clone material; human body fluids, organs and other tissue; nuclear material; rough diamonds; cat and dog fur; ammonium nitrate; radioactive goods; drugs, narcotics and precursors; goods subject to autonomous sanctions; counterfeit debit, credit, and charge cards; weapons, defense, and strategic goods; ozone-depleting substances and synthetic greenhouse gases and radioactive waste; and liquefied natural gas. Remaining controls on primary products apply mainly to food and agricultural products and are administered by the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. Controls administered by the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry require an export license for exports of woodchips and unprocessed wood (for example, whole logs). These controls apply to wood sourced from areas outside Regional Forest Agreement regions and plantation forests within states and territories where Codes of Practice for plantation forestry are not approved by the Australian Government. Export registration and/or licensing procedures apply to agricultural products (meat, dairy products, eggs, live animals and their reproductive material, fish, vegetables, and fruit) to ensure that exporters meet other countries' import conditions. These include sanitary and phytosanitary conditions. In the case of live animals, controls apply to exporters to ensure they meet international transport standards and for livestock, Australia's animal welfare standards. Export controls are regulated by the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry and the appropriate industry agencies. Exports of wine and brandy products in both bulk and bottled form require licenses from the Wine Australia Corporation. Only one entity has an export monopoly for selected agricultural products – the Rice Marketing Board for the State of New South Wales. This board appointed Ricegrowers Limited (trading as SunRice) as the sole and exclusive export license holder for exports of rice grown in New South Wales. (Ricegrowers Limited is also an authorized buyer.) There are no statutory restrictions on the exportation of rice in other Australian states.

Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade (DFAT) coordinates the implementation, administration, and enforcement of UNSC sanctions and autonomous sanctions, working closely with a wide range of agencies, including the Department of Defense, the Department of Home Affairs, the AUSTRAC, and the Australian Federal Police. The export of arms or related material is prohibited, without a permit, under sanctions regimes for the Central African Republic, the DPRK, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Libya, Myanmar, Russia, Somalia, South Sudan, Sudan, Syria, the Taliban, Yemen, and Zimbabwe. Australian law prohibits the export of arms or related material to a designated person or entity for the UNSC sanctions regime in relation to ISIL (Da'esh) and Al-Qaida, and it is not possible to obtain a permit for the export of such items. Arms or related material is defined broadly and includes, but is not limited to, weapons, ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, and spare parts for any of those things, as well as paramilitary equipment.

In addition to these restrictions, there are other restrictions on exports which relate to each specific sanctions regime. For example, with respect to the DPRK, food and medicine are the only goods which may be exported, supplied, sold, or transferred to the DPRK without restriction. Likewise, significant restrictions apply to exports bound for Iran, Iraq, Syria, Russia, and the specified Ukraine region.

The targeted financial sanctions outlined in category II "Exchange Measures" above prohibit dealing with the assets of a proscribed or designated person or entity. This effectively prohibits exports from any person or entity listed on the Consolidated List maintained by the DFAT. The Consolidated List includes persons or entities designated under 17 UNSC sanctions regimes and Australia's 12 autonomous sanctions regimes (including both country-based and thematic regimes). The autonomous country-specific regimes relate to the Former Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Myanmar, Russia/Ukraine, the DPRK, Iran, Libya, and Syria. The autonomous thematic regimes relate to serious violations and abuses of human rights and serious corruption (Magnitsky-style sanctions), significant cyber incidents, and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

With respect to the DPRK, Australian law prohibits, without a sanctions permit, acquiring or extending an interest in, or establishing or participating in a business with, or granting a financial loan or credit to (1) a person or entity (wherever located) that is engaged in an extractive or its related industry or associated infrastructure, in the DPRK (or persons or entities acting on their behalf, direction or control) and (2) a DPRK person or entity, or those acting on their behalf, direction or control, that is engaged in an extractive or related industry outside the DPRK. With respect to a specified Ukraine region, Australian law prohibits, without a sanctions permit: (1) the granting of any financial loan or credit, or the establishment of a joint venture, in relation to the following sectors and/or (2) the acquisition or extension of an interest in an enterprise that was established in a specified Ukraine region and is engaged in the following sectors: the creation, acquisition, or development of infrastructure in the transport, telecommunications, or energy sectors; or the exploitation of oil or gas, or of mineral resources specified in the Autonomous Sanctions (Russia, Crimea, and Sevastopol) Specification 2015. With respect to Russia, Australian law generally prohibits, without a sanctions permit (with some exceptions): (1) the purchase or sale of, or any other dealing with, bonds, equity, transferable securities, money market instruments, or other similar financial instruments, if the financial instrument is issued by an entity specified by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and (2) making, or being part of any arrangement to make loans or credit if the loan or credit is made to an entity specified by the Minister for Foreign Affairs. With respect to Syria, Australian law prohibits, without a sanctions permit, the acquisition or extension of an interest in: (1) the establishment of, or participation in, a joint venture with and/or (2) the granting of a financial loan or credit to an entity that is engaged in the petrochemical industry or the oil and gas industry, and connected to Syria.

framework subject to the percentage interest and monetary thresholds prescribed under the Foreign Acquisitions and Takeovers Act 1975, associated regulations, and foreign investment policy. The monetary threshold that determines whether notification is required depends on the type of investment and the foreign investor's jurisdiction. However, investments that may raise national security concerns are subject to a zero-dollar monetary threshold. Foreign Investment Review Board's (FIRB's) Guidance Note 8 provides more details on national security investments, including when mandatory notification is required.

If a person acquires a substantial holding in a listed entity, or there is a change in their substantial holding, they are also subject to disclosure obligations under Chapter 6C of the Corporations Act. Chapter 6C applies to residents and nonresidents for acquisitions of securities in an entity listed on an Australian financial market. The acquisition of shares and other securities in listed companies or unlisted companies with over 50 shareholders is separately regulated by the takeover rules in Chapters 6 and 6A of the Corporations Act. The requirements in Chapters 6 and 6A apply to both residents and nonresidents but only for acquisitions of securities in companies incorporated in Australia. Disputes regarding control transactions are primarily resolved by the Takeovers Panel. The Panel has published a number of Guidance Notes explaining policy relevant to control transactions.

The policy underlying Chapter 6 is that a bid for an Australian target company should be made on the same terms to all holders: s619(1). However, if a bidder is offering scrip consideration, the securities do not need to be offered to foreign holders (holders with a registered address outside Australia) if the bidder appoints a nominee approved by ASIC to sell the scrip that would have been issued to the foreign holders and distribute the net proceeds of sale to the holders: Section 619(3). This nominee procedure should only be used where the bidder is constrained by foreign laws from offering scrip and the bidder risks a declaration of unacceptable circumstances from the Takeovers Panel if that is not the case: ASIC Regulatory Guide 9 Takeover bids at paragraphs 71–72.

A pro-rata offer of securities may exclude nonresidents (members with a registered address outside of Australia or New Zealand) but only if the company determines that it is unreasonable to extend the offer to nonresidents having regard to the number of holders in the place where the offer would be made, the number and value of securities the holders would be offered, and the cost of legal compliance: s9A(3)(a). If the pro-rata offer is renounceable, the entity must also appoint a nominee to arrange for the sale of entitlements of any excluded nonresident and distribution of the proceeds to them: s9A(3)(c). These requirements are relevant if the company wishes to rely on the disclosure exemption for rights issues in s708AA. Similar requirements are also imposed on all entities listed on the Australian Securities Exchange under Listing Rule 7.7.1 (regardless of whether a disclosure document is provided or not).

If any person, such as a member or underwriter, needs to rely on the takeovers' exemption for rights issues in Item 10 of Section 611, the securities that would otherwise be issued to nonresidents who accept the offer (or the right to acquire those securities) must be transferred to a nominee approved by ASIC to sell and distribute the proceeds of sale to the foreign holders: Section 615. Both of these provisions are intended to facilitate control or capital transactions in circumstances where extending an offer of securities to nonresidents may be constrained by foreign law, or where the cost of compliance with foreign law may be disproportionate to the number of nonresident holders in a particular jurisdiction. ASIC's policy on approval of a nominee for nonresidents is set out in Regulatory Guide – 6 Takeovers: Exceptions to the general prohibition at paragraphs 118–124. Ordinarily ASIC would not approve a nominee for the purposes of s615 if the company was able to make offers to nonresidents. Australian companies which conduct a share buyback must follow the procedure set out in Part 2J.1 of the Act. For an equal-access scheme, all shareholders must be treated equally, including nonresident shareholders. However, ASIC can give individual relief from this legislative requirement to an Australian company to exclude nonresident shareholders from a buyback (which is, in essence, an equal-access scheme) where the company cannot make an offer to some shareholders because of the laws of the country in which they reside, pursuant to Regulatory Guide 110 – Share buybacks at Table 3. The Treasurer's approval is required to hold more than 20% of the voting shares of an Australian bank. The Treasurer may grant approval only if the shareholding is in the national interest or for recently established companies that are below a specified asset size threshold.

Sale or issue locally by nonresidents	No.	While the Corporations Act usually requires a prospectus or other disclosure document for an offer of securities that is received in Australia, whether from a local or foreign issuer, ASIC has given conditional relief from the prospectus disclosure requirements where a foreign entity makes certain offers to Australian resident shareholders of the foreign entity. The conditional relief for rights issues by foreign companies, foreign scrip takeovers, and schemes of arrangement is subject to certain conditions, including listing of the foreign securities on an approved foreign market. We also give relief for offers that result in securities being issued to 20 or fewer investors in 12 months to Australian residents. The provision of financial services, including the offers of financial products including shares in Australia, by residents and nonresidents, is subject to Chapter 7 of the Corporations Act. Chapter 7 imposes a requirement on the provider of the financial services to hold an AFSL, such as dealing and advising, and to meet certain requirements about the operation of the financial services business, for example capital requirements. There are limited exceptions to the AFSL requirement. Currently, a modified AFSL licensing regime exists for foreign financial service providers (FFSPs) of financial services to wholesale clients in Australia if: the FFSP holds a relevant authorization to provide those financial services to wholesale clients in their own overseas regime; ASIC has assessed their overseas regulatory regime as being 'sufficiently equivalent' to Australia. ASIC has set out sufficiently equivalent regimes in ASIC LI 2020/198; and the FFSP is subject to supervision and enforcement action, when required, by the relevant overseas regulatory authority. FFSPs have been granted a transition period to March 31, 2025, to make arrangements to continue their operations in Australia.

This is subject to exemptions in s708 of the Corporations Act, including exemptions for persons who are sophisticated. An offer of debentures that requires a disclosure document is also subject to Chapter 2L of the Corporations Act, which imposes certain obligations on the borrower and requirements as to the appointment of a trustee. The offer of money market instruments may constitute the offer of a deposit-taking facility and require the provider of the facility to be an Authorized Deposit Institution (within the meaning of the Banking Act 1959) in the course of its banking business (within the meaning of that Act), other than an retirement savings account (RSA) (within the meaning of the RSA Act 1997).
Purchase abroad by residents	No.
Sale or issue abroad by residents	No.
On collective investment securities	Yes.
Purchase locally by nonresidents	Yes.	The acquisition of a controlling interest in securities issues by a collective investment fund may be affected by laws and policies on inward direct investment and therefore may require notification to the Australian authorities. Notification may be required under the foreign investment review framework for acquisitions above the percentage interest and monetary thresholds prescribed under Foreign Acquisitions and Takeovers Act 1975, associated regulations, and foreign investment policy. Foreign Acquisitions and Takeovers Regulation 2015 sets monetary thresholds for which FIRB approval is required for foreign entities proposing to obtain a significant interest in a collective investment fund. Further, the acquisition of securities in listed collective investment funds is regulated by the takeover rules in Chapter 6 of the Corporations Act, which prohibit the acquisition of more than a 20% voting interest subject to exceptions such as a regulated takeover. If Australian issuers have determined that it would not be reasonable to make an offer of securities to nonresidents required or permitted by Chapter 6, nonresidents may receive cash instead of securities. For rights issues, which is one of the exceptions to the 20% voting interest prohibition, Section 615 of the Act allows an issuer to sell securities for the benefit of foreign holders and to distribute the proceeds of sale to the holders provided the nominee of the sale facility is approved by ASIC.

Sale or issue locally by nonresidents	Yes.	The provision of financial services, including the offer or issue of financial products including interests in collective investment vehicles (CCIVs) in Australia, by residents and nonresidents, is subject to Chapter 7 of the Corporations Act. Chapter 7 imposes a requirement on the provider of the financial services to hold an AFSL, such as dealing and advising, and to meet certain requirements about the operation of the financial services business, for example, capital requirements. There are limited exceptions to the AFSL requirement. Currently, a modified AFSL licensing regime exists for FFSPs of financial services to wholesale clients in Australia if: the FFSP holds a relevant authorization to provide those financial services to wholesale clients in their own overseas regime; ASIC has assessed their overseas regulatory regime as being 'sufficiently equivalent' to Australia. ASIC has set out sufficiently equivalent regimes in ASIC LI 2020/198; and the FFSP is subject to supervision and enforcement action, when required, by the relevant overseas regulatory authority. FFSPs have been granted a transition period to March 31, 2025, to make arrangements to continue their operations in Australia. ASIC may exempt operators of foreign collective investment schemes (FCISs) from the requirement to hold an AFSL in relation to the operation of the FCIS, to register the FCIS in Australia with ASIC, and to issue a compliant disclosure document. ASIC's policy in relation to FCIS is set out in Regulatory Guide 178 – FCISs. ASIC grants relief from the relevant regulatory requirements on the basis that the FCIS operator complies with the conditions in relation to that relief. Broadly, the relief is based on (1) the regulatory regime to which the FCIS is subject to is sufficiently equivalent to ASIC regulation (from a market integrity and systemic risk perspective); (2) there are effective cooperation arrangements between the overseas regulatory authority and the ASIC; and (3) adequate rights and remedies are practically available to Australian investors. Other exemptions from regulatory requirements may apply in respect of FCISs under frameworks in the Corporations Act. This currently applies to New Zealand schemes under Chapter 8 of the Act and applies to collective investment funds that seek to register as passport funds in a foreign member economy of the Asia Region Funds Passport (currently Japan, New Zealand, Thailand, and the Republic of Korea) and become notified foreign passport funds in Australia (also a member economy) under Chapter 8A of the Act.

Foreign Australian Financial Service (AFS) licensees are exempt from certain provisions in Chapter 7 of the Corporations Act on the basis the FFSP is subject

Outward direct investment	No.
Inward direct investment	Yes.	Controls apply to interests including: (1) investment in media, telecommunications (including Telstra), the financial sector, transport (including Australian international airlines and shipping), defense and military-related industries, the development, manufacture, or supply of or services relating to encryption and security technologies and communication systems, and the extraction of uranium or plutonium or the operation of nuclear facilities, as well as other critical infrastructure; (2) foreign life insurers, who under the Life Insurance Act 1995 may not establish branches in Australia (except for those specified in the Life Insurance Regulations 1995: Chinese, Japanese, Korean, New Zealand, and US insurers); and (3) investment to the extent that constituent states or territories of Australia exercise legislative control over such investment. Controls do not apply to the acquisition of an interest in securities, assets, a trust, Australian land, or a tenement by foreign custodian companies acting at the direction of clients. Proposals of inward direct investment from foreign persons may be subject to approval if they fall within the scope of the foreign investment screening regime, which broadly covers the following and according to where the specified thresholds that were indexed on an annual basis most recently effective January 1, 2023 (previously, effective January 1, 2022): (1) to acquire interests in securities, assets, entities (being corporations and unit trusts), and businesses that have a connection to Australia valued at more than A$310 million (previously A$289 million); (2) if the private investor is from Chile, China, Hong Kong SAR, Japan, Republic of Korea, New Zealand, the USA, and any other country not otherwise listed (other than Australia) for which the CPTPP is in force, and is acquiring an interest in non-sensitive businesses exceeding A$1,339million (previously A$1,250 million) and in sensitive business valued at more than A$310 million (previously A$289 million); (3) actions to acquire an interest in Agribusiness valued above A$67 million (previously A$63 million) unless the private investor is from Chile, New Zealand, and the USA in which case the acquired interest is valued above A$1,339 million (previously A$1,250 million); (4) direct investment by foreign government investors and proposals for new businesses in Australia and acquisition of land regardless of value; (5) direct interest in developed non-sensitive commercial land exceeding A$310 million (previously A$289 million) unless the interest is in developed sensitive–commercial land above A$ 67 million (previously A$63 million) or the direct interest is from a foreign investor from Chile,

China, Hong Kong SAR, Japan, the Republic of Korea, New Zealand, the USA and any other country not otherwise listed (other than Australia) for which the CPTPP is in force, and interest acquired exceeds A$1,339 million (previously A$1,250 million); (6) actions to acquire an interest in vacant commercial land regardless of value; (7) approval is required for direct investment in agricultural land by private investors from Thailand, where the agricultural land is used wholly and exclusively for a primary production business, and where the consideration exceeds A$ 50 million (not cumulative), by private investors from Chile, New Zealand, and the USA where the consideration exceeds A$1,339 (not cumulative) (previously A$1,250 million), or by private investors from other countries where the consideration exceeds A$ 15 million (cumulative); (8) actions to start a national security business, to acquire a direct interest in a national security business or an entity that carries on a national security business, to acquire an interest in national security land, or to acquire a legal or equitable interest in an exploration tenement in respect of national security land regardless of value.

However, mandatory screening of investments in sensitive national security businesses is applied at a $0 monetary threshold. These monetary thresholds referred to in(1)–(7) are indexed annually January 1 each year, except the threshold for agricultural land exceeding A$15 million (cumulative) for private investors from Chile, New Zealand and the US, and $50 million threshold for private investors from Thailand where the agricultural land is used wholly and exclusively for a primary production business.

Effective April 1, 2022, the Foreign Acquisitions and Takeovers Amendment Regulations 2022 came into force. They clarify certain aspects of the foreign investment review framework and streamline the process for certain less sensitive types of investment. Inter alia, they are intended to reduce the regulatory burden for foreign investors that engage in moneylending, invest in unlisted land entities or Australian media businesses, acquire shares or units under rights issues and other pro-rata offers, or transact on behalf of institutional investors as part of a custodian service (through amendments that refine the rules for the notification of these kinds of foreign investments, including raising thresholds and providing broader exemptions from foreign investment screening).

Effective July 1, 2023, foreign persons must give notice of certain actions relating to Australian land, water, entities, businesses, and other assets to the Registrar of the Register of Foreign Ownership of Australian Assets.

With respect to the DPRK, under Australia’s autonomous sanctions regime, it is prohibited, without a sanctions permit, to sell or make available (otherwise than by sale) an interest in a commercial activity in an extractive or related industry in Australia to a DPRK person or entity, or those acting on their behalf. Under the UNSC sanctions regime, it is prohibited, without a sanctions permit, to (1) open a representative office in Australia of or (2) establish a branch or subsidiary in Australia of or (3) conclude an agreement related to (1) or (2) for or on behalf of: a financial institution domiciled in the DPRK; a branch or subsidiary, wherever located, of a financial institution domiciled in the DPRK; or a financial institution wherever domiciled that is controlled by an entity or person in the DPRK.

It is also prohibited, without a sanctions permit, for a Syrian financial institution (or a financial institution controlled by a Syrian person or entity) to open a representative office, branch, or subsidiary in Australia, and acquire an interest in an Australian financial institution. It is also prohibited, without a sanctions permit, to establish a joint venture or a correspondent banking relationship with a Syrian financial institution.

Some of these provisions reflect free trade and international investment agreements. The thresholds that are indexed on an annual basis were also increased effective January 1, 2022.

The Commonwealth Government (1) applies an annual vacancy fee on foreign owners of underutilized residential property where the property is not occupied or is genuinely available on the rental market for at least six months in a 12-month period; (2) capped sales from property developers directly to foreign persons at 50% of dwellings in new residential housing developments under New Dwelling Exemption Certificates; and (3) eliminated the main residence capital gains tax exemption for foreign tax residents.

Tax arrangements:
Most states and territories of Australia impose either higher stamp duties on the purchase of real estate by nonresidents or land tax surcharges on the ownership of land by nonresidents or both. These taxes are levied by the state or territory governments, not the Commonwealth Government.
Foreign buyers of properties are subject to additional duty (stamp duty) of 7% in the states of Queensland, Western and South Australia. The surcharge purchaser duty (stamp duty) on residential property imposed on foreign buyers is 8% in Victoria (for contracts entered into after July 1, 2019), New South Wales and Tasmania. Tasmania also imposes a 1.5% surcharge to foreign purchasers of primary production property.
New South Wales imposes a land tax surcharge on foreign owners of, effective January 1, 2023, 4% (previously 2%) and Queensland applies a surcharge of 2% in addition to land tax on land owned by foreign companies and trusts. The Australian Capital Territory imposes a 0.75% land tax surcharge on foreign owners of the average unimproved land value. Victoria and Queensland apply an absentee surcharge of 2% to all landowners in addition to their land taxes.

Provisions Specific to the Financial Sector

Provisions specific to commercial banks and other credit institutions	Yes.	Under the Banking Act 1959, a body corporate requires an authorization by the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) to conduct banking business in Australia. Foreign banks may operate as locally incorporated subsidiaries or as branches. Branches of foreign Banks are granted an authorized deposit-taking institution license subject to a condition specifically restricting the acceptance of retail deposits by their Australian branches. This is because depositors with branches of foreign banks do not have the same protections under the Banking Act as depositors with Australian authorized deposit-taking institutions. Branches of foreign banks do not have to maintain capital in Australia, as such foreign bank applicants must satisfy APRA that they are subject to adequate supervision in their home country and must have received consent from their home supervisor for establishing a banking operation in Australia. Authorization for licensees providing financial services in emissions units is a requirement. Some new applicants also request authorization to deal in foreign exchange because emissions units' authorizations also include eligible international emissions units. The financial requirements for licensees that issue OTC derivatives to retail clients, including contracts for difference and margin foreign exchange, were increased beginning January 31, 2013, through Class Order (CO) 12/752. These requirements are outlined in Regulatory Guide 166. The increases affected some licensees that have foreign exchange authorizations. The Autonomous Sanctions Regulations of 2011 prohibit: a financial institution from establishing a joint venture, correspondent banking relationship, or a bank account with a Syrian financial institution, or setting up a representative office, branch, or subsidiary in Syria. Syrian financial institutions are prohibited, without a sanctions permit, from opening a representative office, branch, or subsidiary in Australia. 		limited exemptions to be made under the Insurance Regulations 2002; these enable general insurance business that cannot be appropriately placed in Australia to be provided by an unauthorized foreign insurer. The types of insurance business that can be provided by an unauthorized foreign insurer are insurance contracts for atypical risks, high-value insureds, and other risks that cannot reasonably be placed in Australia. There are also exceptions for large businesses and global companies headquartered in Australia. Foreign life insurers must generally operate through Australian-incorporated subsidiaries. The Life Insurance Regulations 1995 provide that only Chinese, Japanese, Korean, New Zealand, and US life insurers may operate through branches in Australia. Insurers are also subject to the licensing, conduct, and disclosure requirements in the Corporations Act 2001 in their dealings with retail clients.

Pension funds	Yes.	Most pension (superannuation) funds, other than self-managed funds that are regulated by the Australian Taxation Office, require APRA licensing under the registrable superannuation entity (RSE) licensing regime. The trustees of these funds must also hold an AFSL that is issued by ASIC and must satisfy conduct and disclosure obligations in the Corporations Act 2001. The licensing regime requires all APRA regulated trustees to hold an AFSL to operate a superannuation fund. The Superannuation Industry (Supervision) Act 1993 restricts related party transactions (for example, lending to members, in-house assets), but there are limited restrictions on investment. Borrowing is generally prohibited. APRA sets prudential standards in relation to investment governance for RSE licensees (see Prudential Standard, Prudential Practice Guide, and Reporting Standard 530), which includes a requirement for the Board of an RSE licensee to approve investment objectives for each investment option offered in each RSE. MySuper (default superannuation) products must have a diversified investment strategy, which can be a single strategy, or a lifecycle strategy. Some superannuation products are subject to an annual performance test administered by APRA. To be eligible for concessional taxation, control and management of a complying pension fund must usually be in Australia (or outside Australia for a period of not more than two years). The way that trustees of superannuation funds must organize portfolio holdings disclosures on fund websites is prescribed. Given these requirements are prescribed, trustees in the Corporations Act 2001 are obliged to make publicly available portfolio holdings disclosures on fund websites. This means that within 90 days of December 31 and June 30 each year, trustees of superannuation funds must make information about the assets and derivatives of their investment options available on the fund website and maintain that information until it is replaced by the next period disclosure. The information must be organized in accordance with requirements specified in the Corporations Regulations 2001, including that disclosure is consistent with tables for disclosure in Schedule 8D of the Corporations Regulations 2001. There are some exemptions from the portfolio holdings disclosure requirement. For example, self-managed superannuation funds and small APRA funds are not subject to the requirements. Trustees of defined benefit funds and with investment options that have been closed to new members for at least 5 years also do not have to meet the requirement. Effective January 31, 2022, all account balances held by a type of superannuation fund known as an 'eligible rollover fund' were required to have been transferred to the Australian Taxation Office and eligible rollover funds had to close. Effective July 1, 2022, existing financial reporting and auditing requirements in Chapter 2M of the Corporations Act were amended to apply to RSEs. The reforms impose financial reporting obligations on RSEs that are consistent with those that apply to public companies and registered schemes, improving transparency in the superannuation sector. The reform requires RSEs to prepare and lodge audited financial reports for each financial year with ASIC (commencing in the 23/24 financial year); publish the financial report, directors' report and auditor's report for a financial year on the superannuation fund's website and provide details of how to access these reports with the notice of the annual members meeting; and provide a copy of the financial reports for a financial year to members and beneficiaries on request. The reforms also amend the requirements for auditors of RSEs, who have requirements under both the Corporations Act 2001 and the Superannuation Industry (Supervision) Act 1993, including preparing an auditor's report for an audit or review of an RSE's financial report for a financial year; report suspected contraventions to APRA and ASIC; meet auditor independence and rotation requirements; and prepare, lodge, and publish auditor transparency reports. Effective July 1, 2023, RSEs are required to comply with new financial reporting and audit requirements under the Corporations Act 2001.

Investment firms and collective investment funds	Yes.	The operation of collective investment funds is subject to strict legal requirements under the Corporations Act 2001 (Act) that outline operations, licensing and compliance obligations, including the FFSPs regulatory framework. Foreign investment in Australian collective investment funds is regulated under Australia's foreign investment laws. The operator of the fund may also set investment and borrowing restrictions. In the case of collective investment funds that are also registered as Australian passport funds, the Corporations (Passport) Rules 2018 (Passport Rules) provides that an operator of such a fund may offer interests in other participating economies of the Asia Region Funds Passport, provided residents in Australia (being the home economy) hold at least 30% of the value of interests in collective investment funds operated by the operator. The passport fund is also subject to investment and borrowing restrictions under the Passport Rules. The regulatory regime for a new type of collective investment fund known as a corporate CCIV was introduced effective July 1, 2022. There are two types of CCIVs – retail and wholesale. Where a sub-fund of a retail CCIV registers as an Australian passport fund under the Asia Region Funds Passport, the sub-fund is subject to investment and borrowing restrictions under the Australian passport rules. For taxation purposes, nonresidents investing through a MIS or CCIV are treated differently to resident investors. Generally, nonresidents are subject to Australia's withholding tax rules, with income arising from passive income investments (such as shares, rent, or interest) subject to a form of withholding tax, while capital gains are taxed only in respect of nonportfolio interests in taxable Australian property. Australia only imposes taxes on Australian sourced income. Domestic (that is, resident) investors are taxed on all incomes at their marginal tax rate.

Limits (max.) on securities issued by nonresidents	No.
Limits (max.) on investment portfolio held abroad	No.	From a tax perspective, there are restrictions on the extent to which a trust can be "closely held" for the purposes of accessing concessional withholding tax rates. One such example is that a trust must not have one nonresident individual holding 10% or more of the participation interests. This restriction applies to both a registered MIS that is a retail trust and a MIS that is a wholesale trust. This is a tax measure and does not constitute a control on ownership.
Limits (min.) on investment portfolio held locally	No.
Currency-matching regulations on assets/liabilities composition	No.

	04/01/2022	The Foreign Acquisitions and Takeovers Amendment Regulations 2022 came into force. Inter alia, they are intended to reduce the regulatory burden for foreign investors that engage in moneylending, invest in unlisted land entities or Australian media businesses, acquire shares or units under rights issues and other pro-rata offers, or transact on behalf of institutional investors as part of a custodian service (through amendments that refine the rules for the notification of these kinds of foreign investments, including raising thresholds and providing broader exemptions from foreign investment screening).

Provisions specific to institutional investors
Pension funds	01/31/2022	All account balances held by a type of superannuation fund known as an "eligible rollover fund" were required to have been transferred to the Australian Taxation Office and eligible rollover funds had to close.
	07/01/2022	Existing financial reporting and auditing requirements in Chapter 2M of the Corporations Act were amended to apply to registrable superannuation entities (RSEs). The reforms impose financial reporting obligations on RSEs that are consistent with those that apply to public companies and registered schemes, improving transparency in the superannuation sector. The reform requires RSEs to prepare and lodge audited financial reports for each financial year with Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) (commencing in the 23/24 financial year); publish the financial report, directors' report and auditor's report for a financial year on the superannuation fund's website and provide details of how to access these reports with the notice of the annual members meeting; and provide a copy of the financial reports for a financial year to members and beneficiaries on request. The reforms also amend the requirements for auditors of RSEs, who have requirements under both the Corporations Act 2001 and the Superannuation Industry (Supervision) Act 1993, including preparing an auditor's report for an audit or review of an RSE's financial report for a financial year; report suspected contraventions to Australian Prudential Regulation Authority and ASIC; meet auditor independence and rotation requirements; and prepare, lodge, and publish auditor transparency reports.
	07/01/2023	Registrable superannuation entities are required to comply with new financial reporting and audit requirements under the Corporations Act 2001.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices	No.	No restrictions as reported in the latest IMF staff report as of December 31, 2022.
Exchange measures imposed for security reasons	Yes.
In accordance with IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51)	Yes.	In accordance with EU regulations and, if applicable, relevant UNSC resolutions, certain restrictions are maintained with respect to certain individuals/entities (a consolidated list of EU sanctions is available at www.sanctionsmap.eu/#/). EU sanctions are currently associated with, for example, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Central African Republic, China, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, the Islamic Republic of Iran, the former government of Iraq, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK-North Korea), Lebanon, Libya, Mali, Moldova, Myanmar (Burma), Nicaragua, Russia, Somalia, South Sudan, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, Venezuela, the former Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Yemen, and Zimbabwe. The euro foreign exchange reference rates are determined by the ECB daily at around, effective April 3, 2023, 14:10 Central European Time (CET) (previously 14:15 CET), and are published at around 16:00 CET. The reference rate against the euro is the average of the buying and selling rates. This is stated in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, Article 127(1). "Without prejudice to the objective of price stability," the Eurosystem will also "support the general economic policies in the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community." Travelers entering or leaving the EU and carrying more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the relevant authorities of the member country through which they enter or leave the EU. The authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to their national FIU. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the traveler makes no declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. To check compliance with the regulation, the national authorities have the right to search natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. In the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation, cash may be confiscated. The EU regulation requires member countries to impose penalties for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to illegal activity, authorities of one member country may exchange information with authorities in other member countries. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EU regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU member country to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purposes of the EU regulation; the EU regulation only harmonizes the system for the EU’s external borders.

Provisions Specific to the Financial Sector

Provisions specific to commercial banks and other credit institutions	Yes.	Global standards on bank capital and resolution were incorporated into European law by Regulation (EU) No. 575/2013 (CRR), Directive 2013/36/EU (CRD IV) and Directive 2014/59/EU (Bank recovery and resolution directive). Directive (EU) 2019/878, amending Directive (EU) 2013/36 (CRD V), applies. It aims to further improve and harmonize the European financial supervisory framework. In October 2021, the European Commission adopted legislative proposals to amend the CRR III and the CRD VI (EU banking package 2021). This package essentially served to complete the implementation of the globally agreed final Basel III reform package in the EU, which is aimed, above all, at strengthening the risk-based approach of banking regulation. As envisaged in the European Commission's legislative proposals, the CRR III framework will start to apply from January 1, 2025. However, numerous exemptions and transitional provisions will postpone the full rollout in the EU until 2030 and 2033, respectively. The European Commission expects its legislative proposals for implementing the latest Basel III rules, which also reflect a number of EU-specific rules, to lead to an increase in EU banks' minimum levels of capital requirements of between 0.7% and 2.7% by 2025 and of between 6.4% and 8.4% by 2030. In Member States whose currency is the euro, the Single Supervisory Mechanism (SSM), the Single Resolution Mechanism (SRM), and the Common Deposit Guarantee Scheme (which is not yet in place) form the European Banking Union. Non-euro Member States may participate if close cooperation has been established. The legal basis for the SSM is Council Regulation (EU) No. 1024/2013; for the SRM, it is Regulation (EU) No. 806/2014. Within the SSM, the ECB directly supervises all so-called significant institutions, while less significant institutions (LSI) remain within the remit of the national supervisory authorities under the ECB's oversight. The Single Resolution Board mandate covers significant institutions and cross-border operating groups. The SRM differs in comparison with the SSM because the decisions of the Single Resolution Board need to be implemented by national resolution authorities to become legally effective. The regulatory framework for credit institutions in Austria, the Federal Banking Act (Bankwesengesetz – BWG), and the national regulations based on this act were revised because of the new European framework. According to Article 69 (5) BWG, FMA follows the guidelines and recommendations and other measures passed by the European Banking Authority (EBA), as well as comply with the warnings and recommendations issued by the European Systemic Risk Board. According to Article 9 (1) BWG, credit institutions (as defined in Article 4 (1) No. 1 CRR) that are authorized and established in an EU Member state may conduct activities listed in Annex I CRD IV by the establishment of a branch or under the freedom to provide services. The Federal Act on the Recovery and Resolution of Banks (Bank Recovery and Resolution Act) transposed the Bank Recovery and Resolution Directive into Austrian law. The Federal Act on the Recovery and Resolution of Banks (Bank Recovery and Resolution Act) conveys far-reaching powers to FMA to deal with credit institutions in crisis. To this effect, institutions must submit recovery plans to FMA, while the FMA draws up resolution plans. The Deposit Guarantee Schemes and Investor Compensation Act (Einlagensicherungs- und Anlegerentschädigungsgesetz – ESAEG) is in force, which transposes the Deposit Guarantee Schemes Directive (Directive 2014/49/EU). Additionally, laws exist concerning specific requirements for special credit institutions (for example, the Federal Act on Savings and Loan Associations). Regulation (EU) No. 260/2012 establishing technical and business requirements for credit transfers and direct debits in euros is in force, which set up the single euro payments area (SEPA) that replaced national payment services with a common EU-wide payment service.

Borrowing abroad	No.
Maintenance of accounts abroad	No.
Lending to nonresidents (financial or commercial credits)	No.
Lending locally in foreign exchange	Yes.	Lending locally in foreign currency is governed by the FMA's Minimum Standards for the Risk Management and Granting of Foreign Currency Loans and Loans with Repayment Vehicles (FMA-FXTT-MS). The minimum standards aim to impose strict criteria on new foreign currency loans (FCLs) to unhedged private consumers and to require banks to develop strategies to reduce the current high volume of outstanding FCLs. FMA minimum standards are not regulations in the legal sense, but are the supervisory authority's recommendations on limiting risk. They are based on the FMA's mandate to protect the national economic interest and the stability of the financial market (BWG Article 69, Paragraph 1) and are linked to the due diligence requirements of managers as specified in BWG Article 39. The exposure of domestic private households to FCLs had been deemed unsustainable by the Austrian authorities. Accordingly, strict regulatory measures were taken (tough interpretation of the minimum standards that restrict FCLs to hedged households or the most creditworthy households).
Purchase of locally issued securities denominated in foreign exchange	No.
Differential treatment of deposit accounts in foreign exchange	Yes.
Reserve requirements	Yes.	Reserve requirements apply to deposits and debt securities up to two years in all currencies. Liabilities from other credit institutions that are already required to hold minimum reserves and liabilities vis-à-vis the ECB are exempt. The current reserve requirement is 1% minus an allowance deduction of €100,000. Effective July 27, 2022, the two-tier system, which was in place since 2019, was discontinued as the deposit facility rate (DFR) was set to 0%. Previously, pursuant to the Governing Council decision ECB/2019/31 published October 15, 2019, a part of the excess reserves holdings, up to a multiple of the required reserves, was exempt from the negative remuneration. On the basis of this decision, the interest rate of excess reserves holdings up to six times of the required reserves was 0%. Effective September 20, 2023, minimum reserve requirements are no longer remunerated.

The total amount of such holdings may not exceed 60% of eligible capital of the institution.
In banks by nonresidents	No.	According to BWG Articles 20–20b, any party (resident or nonresident) that decides to hold a qualifying participation in a credit institution directly or indirectly, or to increase a qualifying participation directly or indirectly so that it reaches or exceeds the 20%, 30%, or 50% limits of the voting rights or capital – or in a way that causes the credit institution to become a subsidiary of that party – must notify the FMA in writing and indicate the amount of the participation and the information required under BWG Article 20b (3).
Open foreign exchange position limits	Yes.	According to Article 351 CRR, credit institutions must fulfill at all times the minimum capital requirement to cover foreign exchange risk.
On resident assets and liabilities	Yes.
On nonresident assets and liabilities	Yes.
Provisions specific to institutional investors	Yes.
Insurance companies	Yes.	With the transposition of Solvency II into national law entering into force, the prudent person principle for investments has been introduced (Article 124 VAG 2016) and requirements as regards eligible assets for funds covering technical provisions and territorial restrictions referring to these assets have been abandoned (cf. Article 134 of the directive 2009/138/EC). Investments of Austrian insurance companies are regulated in the Versicherungsunternehmen Kapitalanlageverordnung, subordinated to the Insurance Supervision Act 2016. While under Solvency II the prudent person principle applies to investments, the Versicherungsunternehmen

		Kapitalanlageverordnung regulation specifies qualitative requirements for investments (for example, concentration risks, credit risk analysis, derivatives, securities lending, risk management, and specifically prudent requirements for funds covering technical provisions). For small mutual associations and small insurance companies outside the scope of Solvency II restrictions on eligible investments and quantitative limits (Article 72 and 90 VAG 2016, Article 3 Small Mutual Associations Investment Regulation – kV-KAV, Article 3 Small Insurance Undertakings Investment Regulation) continue to be in place.
Limits (max.) on securities issued by nonresidents	Yes. The following total investments may only be made up to the percentages stated below, based on the carrying amount of the total investment ("total threshold"): (1) up to 3% in total: cash balances; (2) up to 10% in total: debt securities (corporate bonds not admitted to trading on a regulated market); (3) up to 25% in total: shares and other variable-yield participations (excl. real estate companies) including any shares held indirectly via investment funds; (4) up to 30% in total: (a) real estate and immovable property rights, (b) shares and other variable-yield participations in real estate companies, (c) units in real estate funds, and (d) mortgage loans and immovable property rights; (5) up to 50% each in total: (a) debt securities (corporate bonds) and loans to regional or local authorities of an OECD member state. Similar regulations apply to Small Insurance Undertakings not subject to Solvency II (Article 4 Small Mutual Associations Investment Regulation – kV-KAV, Article 4 Small Insurance Undertakings Investment Regulation – kVU-KAV).
Limits (max.) on investment portfolio held abroad	Yes.	Controls apply to (1) the acquisition of real estate outside the EU, if the asset in question is to form part of the cover of the prescribed solvency margin for a local branch of a third country insurance company established in Austria with the solvency regime in the third country not considered equivalent by the European Commission (Article 13, Paragraph 4 and Article 14, Paragraph 1 No. 6 VAG 2016); (2) the acquisition of real estate abroad, if the asset in question is to form part of the guarantee funds of a local branch of a third country insurance company established in Austria with the solvency regime in the third country not considered equivalent by the European Commission (Article 13, Paragraph 4 and Article 14, Paragraph 1 No. 6 VAG 2016); (3) loans granted to nonresidents, or for which the designated collateral is located abroad, if the asset in question is to form part of the guarantee funds of a local branch of a third country insurance company established in Austria with the solvency regime in the third country not considered equivalent by the European Commission (Article 13, Paragraph 4 and Article 14, Paragraph 1 No. 6 VAG 2016); and (4) loans to residents outside the EU, or for which the designated collateral is located outside the EU, if the asset in question is to form part of the cover of the prescribed solvency margin for a local branch of a third country insurance company established in Austria with the solvency regime in the third country not considered equivalent by the European Commission (Article 13, Paragraph 4 and Article 14, Paragraph 1 No. 6 VAG

The investment of the assets allocated to an investment and risk-sharing group must be effected within prudent person rule and must take account of the other provisions of the current Federal Pensionskassen Act. The Federal Pensionskassen Act has been amended within the course of the implementation of the IORP II Directive (EU) 2016/2341. There are requirements for internal investment guidelines. The sale of foreign currency is realized at auctions organized by the Central Bank to fulfill the transfer obligations of the State Oil Fund to the state budget. The amount of currency to be offered at the auction is announced in advance to the market participants. The results of currency auctions are published immediately. In addition, the Central Bank has the right to intervene in the interbank foreign exchange market, if necessary. Foreign exchange market	Yes.	ADs are largely permitted to determine their bid-ask spread on foreign exchange transactions. Commercial bank fees and charges are set solely by the banks themselves. For transactions with the public, commercial banks are authorized to charge a commission of 0.50% per US dollar on the purchase and 0.75% per US dollar on the sale of US dollars and 0.50% per pound on the purchase or sale of pounds sterling.
Spot exchange market	Yes.	Along with commercial banks, stand-alone money transfer business operators are also included as participants. These operators are licensed by the CBB and make payments to correspondents abroad on behalf of clients. As of December 31, 2022, there are 214 licensed banks, 5 nonbank money transmission service providers, and 20 money transmission agents. Money transmission businesses must obtain Exchange Control approval to deal in foreign currency and operate foreign currency accounts with local commercial banks and abroad. Money transmission businesses do not make foreign exchange transactions directly with the CBB.
Operated by the central bank	Yes.	Buying and selling rates for pounds sterling are also officially quoted, with the buying rate based on the rate in the New York market; the selling rate is 0.5% above the buying rate. There is also a market in which investment currency may be negotiated among residents through the CBB.
Foreign exchange standing facility	Yes.	The CBB buys and sells US dollars at the official rate without a commission and deals only with commercial banks and the government. The CBB and commercial banks (when acting under delegated authority) verify the bona fide nature of each transaction before providing foreign exchange. The CBB does not intervene directly with market participants at their quoted rates nor does the CBB propose its own quotes to market participants or intervene via market markers. The details (value and negotiated rate) of each transaction are required to be reported to the CBB for statistical purposes and to ensure adherence to open position limits. As of December 31, 2022, all nine licensed local banks participate in the interbank market.
Over the counter	Yes.	Interbank transactions are negotiated over the counter.

ADs may deal forward in foreign currency with nonresidents without prior approval from the CBB.

©International Monetary Fund. Not for Redistribution

		Commercial banks may execute forward deals among themselves at market rates, but they must ensure when carrying out all forward cover arrangements that their open spot or forward position does not exceed 5% of the respective bank's Tier 1 capital. While the CBB does not itself participate in the forward exchange market, it facilitates swap transactions on behalf of the government of The Bahamas.
Official cover of forward operations	No.
